GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

CENTRAL ARCHÆOLOGICAL LIBRARY

ACCESSION NO. 35372

CALL No. 934. 01895/ Gop/ Aig

D.G.A. 79

The Madras University Historical Series III HISTORY OF THE PALLAVAS OF KANCHI

SIMHAVISHNU AND HIS QUEENS

Page St.

OF THE

PALLAVAS OF KANCHI

BY

R. GOPALAN, M.A.,

University Research Student, 1920-1924, Sub-Librarian, Connemara Public Library, Madras

EDITED FOR THE UNIVERSITY WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

BY

S. KRISHNASWAMY AIYANGAR, M.A., HONY. Ph.D.,

Professor of Indian History and Archaology, Madras University, Honorary Correspondent of the Archaological Survey of India

35372

D4151

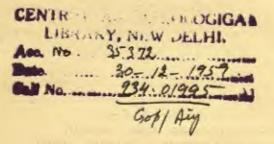

934.01995

Gob Any THE DIRE

Library Regy No

PUBLISHED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF MADRAS

1928

PRINTED IN INDIA

BY GEORGE KENNETH AT THE

DIOCESAN PRESS, MADRAS—1928. C13638

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	ix
41.45	1 3
I IMPRODUCTORY HISTORY OF PREVIOUS, K	E-
Comparato HISTORY FOR TI	118
PALEAVAS COMMENTERS	***
II. THEORIES OF THE ORIGIN OF THE PALLAVA	hat S:
PRE-PALLAVA HISTORY OF KANCHIPURA	25 - 15
III. EARLY PALLAVAS OF THE PRAKRIT RECORD
IV. EARLY PALLAVAS OF THE SANSKRIT RECORD
V. CONTEMPORARY POLITICAL POWERS. To	нн
SALANKAYANAS, KADAMBAS, BTC.	70
VI. THE PALLAVA ASCENDENCY—' THE DYNASTY	OF
VI. THE PALLAVA ASCENDENCY— THE DYNAMISE SIMHAVISHNU' THE REIGN OF SIMHAVISH	NU
AND MAHENDRAVARMAN 1	79
	TA-
VII. NARASIMHAVARMAN I (MAHAMALLA) TO RA	97
SIMBA
VIII. DYNASTIC REVOLUTION. HIRANYAVARMAN A	ND
HIS SUCCESSOR NANDIVARMAN PALLAY	112
MALLA	our Billion
IX. SUCCESSORS OF PALLAVAMALLA	132
X. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS OF PALLAVA RU	LE
IN SOUTH INDIA	146
APPENDICES
(A) A Chronological Index of Pallava Inscriptions	163
(A) A Chronological Index of Land	215
AM Restract Trilli tile hamasimus	221
(C) Extract from the 'Avantisundarikathāsara'	229
SPECIAL NOTES BY EDITOR "	233
ERRATA	235
INDEX	600

					PA	GE
	ILLUSTRAT	CIONS	AND	MAPS
STATUE OF ADIVARAL	SIMHAVISHNU A TEMPLE AT	WITH MAHA	HIS BALIPU	QURENS URAM	IN THE	iece
STATUE OF I	MAHENDRAVAL	RMAN [WITH	HIS QUI	EBNS IN
THE SAME						88

Map of South India showing Distribution of Pallava Rock-cut Temples bearing Inscriptions ...At end

WORKS CONSULTED

Aiyar (K. V. S.): Historical Sketches of Ancient Dekkan.

Archaelogical Reports of Mysore.

Archæological Survey of India Annual Reports for 1906-7.

Beal: Buddhist Records of the Western World.

Bombay Gazetteer.

Carr (Capt.): Desc. and Historical Papers on the Seven Pagodas.

Coomaraswami (A.K.): A History of India and Indonesian Art.

Crole: Chingleput Manual.

Epigraphia Indica.

Epigraphia Carnataca.

Fergusson (J.) and Burgess (J.): Cave Temples in India.

Fergusson: History of Indian and Eastern Architecture.

Fleet : Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts.

: Gupta Inscriptions.

Indian Antiquary.

Indian Historical Quarterly.

Journal of Indian History.

Journal of the Mythic Society.

Jouveau-Dubreuil (G): Archaéologie du Sud de l' Inde (1914).

: Ancient History of Deccan (1921).

: Dravidian Architecture.

: Pallava Antiquities.

: Pallavas (1917).

: Pallava Painting.

Kanakasabhai (V.) : The Tamils Eighteen hundred Years Ago.

Krishna Sastri (H.): Two Statues of Pallava Kings and Five Pallava Inscriptions on a Rock-temple at Mahabalipuram. Mem. Arch. Sur. of India', No. 26. Krishnaswami Aiyangar (S.): Ancient India (1911).

: The Beginnings of South Indian

History (1917).

: Early History of Vaishnavism in South India.

: Some Contributions of South

India to Indian Culture (1924). : Origin and Early History of the Pallavas of Kanchi.

: Manimekhalai in its Historical Setting.

Longhurst (A. H.): Pallava Architecture. Parts 1 & II. Mem. Arch. Sur. of India', Nos. 17 & 33.

South Indian Epigraphy - Annual Reports.

The Influences of Indian Art (1925). By Strzygowski (J.) and others.

The Madras Journal of Literature and Science.

The Mahavamsa.

Nalavira Prabandam.

Rea (A.): Pallava Architecture.

Rice (L.): The Mysore Gazetteer. 2 Vols.

: Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions.

Sentamil.

Sewell: List of Antiquities in the Madras Presidency, 2 Vols. South Indian Inscriptions, Vols. I-V.

Srinivasa Aiyangar (P. T.): History of Pallavas. (Tamil.)

Srinivasa Aiyangar (M.): Tamil Studies.

Taylor (The Rev. William): Oriental Historical MSS. 2 Vols.

Transactions of the Second and Third All-India Oriental Conference-1924.

Travancore Sanskrit Series LV. The Mattavilasaprahasana of Sri Mahendravikramavarman

Vaidya (C. V.): A History of Mediaval Hindu India.

INTRODUCTION

The following pages embody the work of Mr. R. Gopalan, M.A., a Research Student at the University, who took up for his subject the History of the Pallavas of Kanchi. He worked through his full term, and the thesis incorporates his work on the subject. The thesis of just a little over 160 pages constitutes a dessertation on the Pallavas, which takes us as far as we can proceed on the subject with the material at our disposal. Many of the difficulties in the subject have been brought nearer to solution by the work of a number of scholars, all of which is considered in the work. It does not pretend to have solved all questions connected with the history of the Pallavas finally, but it may be stated that Mr. Gopalan's work carries us as near to an up-to-date history of the Pallavas as, in the circumstances, is possible.

Our purpose in this introduction is to draw attention to the salient features of the thesis and indicate points where more light would be welcome. Such advance as was possible in the study of the subject within the last year or two is also incorporated with a view to completing the work of Mr. Gopalan and to invite examination and criticism by those interested in Indian Historical Research.

The name Pallavas has been a problem for scholars, and has received attention from time to time from several of them, offering explanations of various kinds; the doubt and the difficulty alike have arisen from the fact that a race of people called 'Pahlavas' were known and are referred to as such along with the Sakas and others, both in the North-west of India and nearer in the North-western coast of the Dakhan. This, in literary texts sometimes takes the alternative form 'Pallava', and thus two forms, 'Pahlava' and 'Pallava' occurring side by side, give colour to the assumption that the two words are identical. They are indeed identical in form, but do not preclude the possibility of another word assuming this identical form. The word 'Pallava' as it applies to the rulers of Kanchi is undoubtedly and invariably a later form. We do not meet with the form ' Pahlava' in connection with the Pallayas of Kanchi in any record of their time. The question therefore would naturally arise whether we need necessarily regard the name ' Pallavas' as applied to the rulers of Kanchi as at all equivalent to the other 'Pallavas' either as a word or in regard to what the word stands for. The word as applied to 'Pallavas' in the first instance seems to be a translation of the Tamil words 'Tondaiyar' and 'Tondaman', and this finds confirmation in some of the copper-plate charters, which do bring in tender twigs of some kind in connection with the eponymous name 'Pallava'. This undoubtedly is a later use of the term, but gives the indication that even at that comparatively late period, the traditional notion was that they were not foreigners, such as the Puhlavas would have been. In all the material that has been examined, there is nothing to indicate either the migration of a people or even of a family that migh have ultimately raised itself into a dynasty from the North-west, so that the assumption of a connection between the one set of people and the other rests upon the mere doubtful ground of a possibility, whereas the translation or adaptation of a Southern word into Sanskrit is very much more than a possibility, as indeed a word like 'Dravida' or 'Dramida' would clearly indicate. The distinction that Rajasekhara makes between the Southern Pallava and the North-western Pahlava seems in the circumstances to be a crucial indication that in the estimation of scholarly folk of the ninth and tenth centuries, the two were to be regarded as distinct from each other. The foreign origin of the Pallayas therefore seems to have no ground to support it.

The Pallavas seem nevertheless to have been foreign to the locality as far as our evidence takes us at present. The rulers of Kanchi had continued to be known as Tondamans all through historical times. The people of the locality were similarly known as Tondaiyar, the region occupied by the people consequently Tondamandalam. These names are all traceable in South Indian literature in the period of prominence of the Pallavas and even before. The name Pallava however is used generally in the charters ever since the Pallavas issued charters, so that historically speaking we would be justified if we took Pallava and Topdamān to be synonymous, and this receives support in the use of the compound expression in one of the poems of Tirumangai Ālvār. 'the Pallava, who is the ruler of the Topdaiyar' (Pallavan Topdaiyar Kon). Therefore it is not as if literature did not know the term; much rather literary use regarded the two as synonymous, so that the Pallavas, whoever they were, were Topdamāns, rulers of Topdamandalam undoubtedly.

So far as the Pallavas of the charters are concerned, whether the charters be issued in Prakrit or in Sanskrit, they are termed, the Pallavas of Kanchi, though several of the charters happened to be issued from localities comparatively far to the north of Kanchi. Several of the places in which their inscriptions and copper-plate charters have been found, or from which these were issued, are capable of location from the Bellary District eastwards up to the River Krishna in the north-Even so they seem to exclude the region which might geographically be described as the region of the Nalla Malais and the Pacha-Malais extending southwards along the mountainous tracts of the Eastern Ghats till we come past Tirupati into Chittoor, and the Bay of Bengal. From the Sangam literature so-called of Tamil, we are enabled to make the following distribution of peoples, if not exactly of rulers and dynasties. The Pandya country was in the extreme south extending from coast to coast. The Chera extended northwards from it along the coast stretching into the interior indefinitely, the actual eastern boundary varying from time to time almost up to the frontiers of Karur. Therefrom went northwards up to the borders of the great forest the territory known to Tamil literature as Konkānam (Konkan), over which ruled a particular chieftain known as Nannan till he was overthrown by the Cheras. The east coast region, however, beginning with the River Vellar flowing across the state of Pudukottah now and emptying itself into the Bay of Bengal which marked the orthodox southern boundary of the Cholas, constituted the Cholamandalam which actually extended northwards therefrom to as far as the River South Pennar where began the division known as Aruvanadu, which extended northwards along the coast almost as far as the Northern Pennar. This last division fell into two parts. Aruvānādu or Aruvā South and Aruvā Vadatalai or Aruvā North. The region set over this in the interior including perhaps even a considerable part of what is marked off as Aruvanadu constituted the Tondamandalam, a division occupied by the Tondayar and belonging to them. It is this Tondamandalam that was dominated by Kanchi and extended vaguely northwards as far as Tirupati, which seems to have marked off the northern boundary, which sometimes extended farther northwards quite up to the northern borders of the Pulicat Lake, the region round Kalahasti on one side of it at any rate. being borne in the old accounts even now as Tondaman Magani. We have evidence of an old chieftain by name Tiraiyan ruling over the territory dominated by Vengadam or Tirupati whose capital was in a place called Pavattiri (Reddipalem in the Gudur Taluk of the Nellore District). At one time this region was known as Kakandinadu, 'submerged by the sea,' Kākandi being the name of the Chola capital, Puhār, because of the semi-historical ruler, Kakandan. It seems as though this territory was a new conquest to which was given the name from the capital of the conquering rulers. Whether the name was actually so given to it or no, it is evident that the region was ruled by a Tiraiyan chieftain who is referred to in the poems of the Ahanmaju as l'iraiyan merely without a qualifying adjunct. The Chola Karikāla is given credit in tradition which has come down to us for having cleared forests, constructed tanks and made other irrigation works, and thus introduced civilization in Tondamagdalam, which till then remained, from the point of view of the Chola country, uncivilized. Chola viceroys were thereafter appointed at Kanchi, and the territory ruled over by the Viceroy at Kanchi is generally referred to as Tondamandalam. What is traditional in the story finds confirmation in the Sangam noem Pattinapalai and in another poem by the same author Perumbanarrupadai, which had for its hero the Tondaman llam-Tiraivan as he is known to literature. He is described in the poem as of Chola birth and as a powerful ruler of Kanchi and is ascribed a descent from the Cholas, nay in fact the family of Rama, as in fact in the later Pauranic genealogy of these Cholas some of the Ikshvaku rulers are made to figure. This traditional connection is on a footing with that between the Ikshvakus and the Gurjara Pritiharas of Kanauj, During this period and almost contemporaneously with the Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan, the territory of the elder Tiraiyan seems to have been held in power by a chieftain generally associated with Vengadam and described ordinarily by the name Pulli, chief of the Kalvar or, as the correcter reading would warrant, Kalavar. The forest region therefore in the middle seems to have constituted a block inhabited by the people Kalayar who had their tribal ruler with headquarters at Vengadam. That is the position that we derive from the Sangam literature of Tamil as such. Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan passed away and with him Sangam literature as well perhaps, and we are left in the dark altogether as to what had befallen Kanchi or the territory dependent thereon. That is the Tamil side of the evidence from the Sangam literature leaving aside the question of the age of the Sangam for the present.

On the other side of it, the region round Adoni is described in early inscriptions as Sătăhani Āhāra, sometimes as Sătavāhani Rāshtra perhaps giving us the indication that it was a settlement of Sātavāhanas, which may be recent or early. It probably indicates that the Sātavāhanas were perhaps not exactly native to the locality, but acquired the territory and gave it their name to mark a new acquisition unless it be that other people called it by that name as the homeland of the Sātavāhanas. In either case, we find the Sātavāhana rulers on this border of the Tamil country, and one of the inscriptions of Pulumāvi mentions a great Sātavāhana general, Mahā

Sēnātipati Skandanaga, probably an earlier governor of a troublesome border country. The records of the Pallavas similarly have reference to this region, and are couched in a form like the Satavahana inscriptions in regard to language, the details of the definition of time, and even such details as do occur in regard to the very nature of the administration itself. The provenance of the ship-coins of lead or potin sometimes ascribed to the Pallavas, but more generally taken to be Satavähana coins, in the region extending from the Northern Pennar to the Southern gives an indication of an effort of the Satavahana to bring this region under their authority. The references to the successful struggle against the Aryans, which some of the Chola monarchs claim to themselves as well as the Malayaman ruler of Tirukovilür perhaps is a reflex of this effort on the part of the Sātavāhanas. When the Pallavas therefore emerged from this region-and we are given the information in the earliest Pallava charter that the first great Pallava ruler of the locality referred to as Bappa Deva made a free distribution of a hundred thousand ox ploughs, etc., we seem to be introduced to an effort at civilizing the locality appearing very like an extension of the effort of Karikala to civilize Tondamandalam itself. This will appear clearly from the sequel. The Pallava charters themselves seem to argue a connection with the Satavahanas of a more or less intimate character, political as well as institutional. This seems clear from the Prakrit charters much more pronouncedly than perhaps even the Sanskrit ones. The conclusion to which the epigraphists have arrived that the Pallavas of the Prakrit charters were earlier and ought so to be regarded seems well warranted by the circumstances of the case and the character of the documents as such. That these early rulers issued their charters in Sanskrit and Prakrit indifferently at the same time. and must be regarded as the same people is a conclusion which while it may cut the gordian knot seems to have little to justify it on the basis of the facts of the position. Superficial paleographical resemblances cannot be held to upset the more certain evidence of institutional continuity to which the Prakrit charters unmistakably point. Since the Pallavas issued their charters in Prakrit and of a style like that of the earlier Satavahana charters, does it not seem reasonable to argue that the early Pallavas of the Prakrit charters were officers of the Satavahanas, or at least officially connected with them and dependent upon their authority? It seems therefore reasonable to argue that the Satavahana governors of the south-eastern frontier gradually extended their territory, civilizing it as they conquered it, introducing the arts of agriculture and ultimately made themselves masters of the locality and extending southwards when the Tamil powers weakened to take into their territory Kanchi and Tondamandalam. It was the conquest of this that gave them the standing to make themselves real rulers and whatever of title was wanting in it was made good ultimately by a marriage which brought along with it a further addition to the territory. This becomes clear both from the account that Mr. Gopalan has given of succeeding events as well as from the analysis of these inscriptions which he has provided in the appendix. The Pallavas of the Prakrit charters call themselves rulers of Kanchi. So do the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters. But at the outset those Pallavas that issued these Sanskrit charters lay claim to having acquired their royal position by an influential marriage with a Naga princess and by that means became 'possessed of a wife and a kingdom simultaneously '. This could only mean that the Naga alliance brought in an accession of territory which put their claim to independent rule on a really more legitimate footing than that of mere conquest or occupation, which might have been regarded as a mere act of usurpation.

In the empire of the Satavahanas which began to break up early in the third century, the dismemberment seems to have been due somewhat earlier to the provincial governors setting themselves up in some kind of independence. The southwestern block seems to have remained in its integrity the latest, while the aggressions of the Kshatrapas in the north and north-west to some extent, and the advance of the Vākātakas from the middle to a larger extent, deprived them of what was the headquarters block of the Satavahana empire. The eastern and south-eastern portion must similarly have separated themselves, and we find on the farther side of the Krishna river the Sālankāyana first and Vishnukundins later occupying the territory north of the Krishna. There was perhaps similar disintegration noticeable further south along the East coast, so that when (about a century after the passing away of Andhra rule completely), Samudragupta's invasion came south, there were many kingdoms in the region which submitted to his authority and accepted a feudatory position to his overlordship. A ruler of Kanchi by name Vishnugopa figures in the list, and although he is not called a Pallava in the Samudragupta inscription-we have no right to expect this where every ruler is simply defined by references to his capital, not to his family or dynasty and Vishnugopa was ruler of Kanchileaves but little doubt, and the occurrence of a number of Vishnugopas in the list of Pallava rulers of Kanchi leaves us in no uncertainty that this Vishnugopa was as well a Pallava ruler. It is this disturbing influence of Samudragupta's invasion that introduced a change, which necessitated the succeeding ruler of Kanchi to make an effort at legitimizing his own particular position as ruler of Kanchi. This was done, in all probability, by a marriage alliance with the heiress of the south-western block of the Satavahana territory, the territory dependent upon the viceroyalty of Banavasi. The rulers were known generally as Chūtu Nāgas, and, if a princess of that family had been married to a Pallava, it would be a Naga alliance that would give at the same time a sort of a claim to the territory of which she was heiress to the Pallavas. Otherwise the overlordship claimed by the Pallavas and acknowledged readily by the Gangas, and none the less acknowledged though less readily by the Kadambas, would be inexplicable. Mayurasarman almost shows himself rebel against Pallava authority. The Ganga rulers readily acknowledged it, two of their kings having been installed by their Pallava overlords Simhavarman and Skandavarman. This means that the Pallavas claimed authority over the whole of the territory of the Sătavāhanas in the south, and that is what really accounts for the implacable enmity between the Great Pallavas and the early Chāļukyas, who became rulers of the territory in the immediate neighbourhood of the kingdom of Banavasi of the Kadambas. It seems, thefore, clear that the Pallavas began as officers of the Sātavāhanas and ultimately rose to undisputed possession of the territory of Kanchi, the right to which they strengthened by an alliance with the heiress of the southern block of the Sātavāhana territory, thus in a way becoming titular descendants of the Sātavāhanas over the whole of the southern region of Sātavāhana territory including in it their own new conquest, the territory of Tondamandalam dependent upon Kanchi.

From what is stated in the foregoing pages, it would have become clear that the Pallavas of the charters starting from the south-eastern marches of the Satavahana territory gradually occupied the region of Kurnool, Nellore and part of the Cuddapah Districts, and extended southwards till they gradually appropriated the town of Kanchi itself and the territory dependent thereon, in other words, what is known to the Tamils as Tondamandalam. In this process of gradual conquest and appropriation of the territory intervening the south-eastern frontier of the Andhra kingdom and the northern viceroyalty of the Cholas, they must have dislodged the people who were in occupation of the territory under the elder Tiraiyan of Pavattiri, and latterly the chiefs of Vengadam, of whom Pulli's name is familiar to the Sangam literature. It is this dislodgement of the tribe of people known hitherto as Kalvar. but more appropriately speaking, Kalavar, that brought about the disorder in the territory lying immediately to the south of the Nellore District extending southwards to the banks of the Kaveri. It is this region that gets involved in the Kalabhra! trouble and the process of expansion of the Kalabhras is reflected in the disorder and unsettlement which is noticeable even in the kingdom of the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters. The period beginning therefore with the middle of the third century and extending onwards is the period of these migrations of the Kajabhras from their original home in a general southward movement, which overturned the territory of Tondamandalam, created confusion and disorder and brought about even the ultimate extinction of the well-established monarchies of the Tamil land. It is a movement like what is actually under reference in the details that we get of a Kajabhra interregnum, as the epigraphists call it, from the Vēļvikudi plates of the Pandyas of the latter half of the eighth century A.D.

For a detailed account of the Kalabhras see my paper. The Kalabhra interregium and what it means in South Indian History, presented to the International Congress of Orientalists held at Oxford, August 1928.

Any reasonable investigation of this particular question requires a general idea of the whole position. Without assuming too much, we may take it that these are known facts in regard to the Pallavas. The first, according to generally accepted opinion, is that the earliest of them issued charters in Prakrit much in the style of the Sātavāhana charters, of which we have knowledge of the localities concerned. Three or four generations of these Paliavas happen to be known. The Allahabad Prasasti of Samudragupta makes mention of a Vishnugopa of Kanchi. Without pausing to enquire whether this Vishnugopa was a Pallava or no-there is nothing in the context of the inscription to indicate that he was not a Pallava as no ruler is mentioned by his dynastic name, but all of them are associated with their capitals-Vishnugopa must have been a ruler of Kanchi contemporary with Samudragupta. This may be taken to be the second established fact. Then it is that we come upon a confused dark period where more light would certainly be welcome. But soon after, for a couple of hundred years, we find a dynasty of rulers, the order of whose succession, we cannot as yet fix very definitely. These rulers for some reason or other issued their charters always in Sanskrit, and called themselves invariably rulers of Kanchi, although some of their charters were issued from various 'victorious camps' of which there are as many as three or four capable of location in the Nellore District, that is, the region north of Tondamandalam proper. With these few main facts, which may be taken as established, we have to build up the history of the period from such glimpses as we get of details by setting them in a reasonable order on the basis of what is generally known. One general fact of Pallava history of this period-the period of the Sanskrit charters-is that it was a period of some amount of confusion, in which the succession to the throne itself could not have been in any very regular established order. There had been wars to the north, and wars to the south, and confusion in the interior of the territory of the Pallayas themselves. That seems to have been a period in which the Kadambas rose to power and the Gangas came into historical view on the one side. The Cholas almost passed into oblivion and the Tamil country suffered some kind of a confusion, as to the nature of which we have been in the dark till the Vëlvikudi plates threw some light upon it by stating categorically that a certain set of rulers, at the head of the people Kalabhras, overthrew the Tamil rulers of the south, the famous three crowned kings of Sangam literature. What is the cause of all this confusion and what is it that could satisfactorily explain all the facts mentioned above categorically? We have a specific lead in the Velvikudi plates for this, namely, that the Kalabhras came into the Tamil country as far south as the territory of the Pandyas, and upset the settled order to the extent of destroying a Brahmadeya gift (a free gift of land to Brahmans) which in orthodox parlance implies the destruction of a settled order of rule by the creation of a very considerable amount of confusion in the administration. If we could know something of these Kalabhras, we may possibly throw some light upon the causes of all the confusion in the history of the Pallavas during the period. For this again, there is a certain amount of light that we can derive from the Velvikudi plates themselves. The plates were issued by an individual sovereign, who restored the grant to the living representative of its original donee on satisfactory proof that the village was originally granted in the manner claimed. His father, generally known to epigraphists by the titles Termaran Rājasimha, we know, beyond doubt, was a contemporary of Nandivarman Pallavamalla (cir. A.D. 717 to cir. A.D. 782). Alloting him to somewhere about the middle of the long reign of Nandivarman, we may roughly place him in about A.D. 750 or A.D. 740. We want six generations to come to the period when the Pandya country emerged from out of the Kalabhra rule and got back into Pandya rule, and a certain ruler by name Kadumkon is stated in the grant to have done this. Even allowing the moderate span of twenty-five years' rule to each of these six generations, Kadumkon's rule would come to somewhere about A.D. 600 more or less, bringing him roughly into contemporaneity with the first great Pallava ruler, Simhavishnu. The period of the Kalabhra interregnum, according to the Velvikudi plates thus coincides with the period of Pallava history under the rule of the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters. If the Kalabhras created confusion in the Tamil country, they must have come from elsewhere into it. Wherefrom did they come? It is obvious that they did not come from the south. The Pandya country seems the southern limit of their reach. During the period, Chola rule seems to have gone into eclipse of a more or less thorough character. The natural inference therefore would be that they probably advanced southwards. If they were in the Chola country before coming to the Pandya, could we not reasonably infer that they had been in the Pallava country before coming into the Chola, or at least had something to do with the Pallava? If so, who could these Kalabhras be, why were they so-called, and what would be the cause of their southward migration?

We have stated above on the authority of the Prakrit charters that the so-called Pallavas were viceroys of the south-eastern marches of the Andhra country, and they gradually extended their territory so as to occupy the region dominated by the hill Vēngadam, and ruled over by tribal chieftains, the earlier one known to literature being Tiraiyan of Pavattiri and the later one Pulli of Vēngadam. The latter chief is generally spoken of as the chief of the Kalvar in the so-called Śangam literature. But the learned editor of these works has since discovered that the correcter reading, on manuscript authority, would be Kalavar and not Kalvar. In the region which they occupied in the period of the later Satavahanas, and therefore the period immediately preceding that of the Pallavas, they had been a set of frontier people, at least somewhat predatory in point of character, accustomed to lifting cattle from the northern frontier and thereby flourishing upon it as a profession, and that is how Pulli is described in the Sangam literature. The tightening of the hold of the Pallavas even as viceroys of the Andhras by a pressure applied both from the north and west. must have dislodged these people from the locality of their denizenship, and set forward their migration which ultimately overturned the Tondamandalam first, Cholamandalam next, and a considerable part of the Pandyamandalam after that. Perhaps it is this disturbance, and possibly the confusion caused by the invasion of Samudragupta through some of these regions, that must have ultimately brought about the subversion of the settled order and the introduction of the confusion, from out of which emerged the Pallavas of Kanchi of the Sanskrit charters. That period, it will be found, is the period in which something of a radical change had been taking place in the south-western viceroyalty-the palatine viceroyalty of the Andhras-of Banavasi. We see in that region, a set of rulers who called themselves Chutu Nagas, claim relationship with the ruling family of the Satavahanas and achieving political distinction by wars against the Sakas and the Kshatrapas, the enemies of the great Sātavāhana, Gautamiputra Sātakarņi. In the best days of their power, their territory seems to have extended as far north as the Godavari. but it began to shrink on the northern side, so that they became a purely southern power. The illuminating detail that the Vēlūrpālayam plates give us of Virakūrcha becoming, heir to a kingdom by a marriage with a wife, by which, as is stated in the quaint language of the charter, 'he simultaneously obtained a wife and a kingdom.' This seems to be no more than his marrying the heiress of the Chutu Nagas and, by securing a wife of that distinction, he became also the heir to rising of the later Cholas to power in the latter half of the ninth century.

The narration of events above, it would have been noted, assumes the existence of a period of prosperity reflected in the Sangam literature anterior to the coming of the Pallavas of Kanchi into the region of Tondamandalam. The assumption is based on evidence which an effort has been made to upset by another assumption without any valid evidence, we should say, of a Chola interregnum in the rule of the Pallavas of Kanchi on the basis of the statement that Kumāravishnu II had to retake his capital from his enemies. The difficulties against accepting this assumption are many and fundamental; anything like a capture of Kanchi by the Cholas and even its retention in the hands of the Cholas for some little time till recapture by Kumaravishnu, would hardly satisfy the conditions of the Chola Karikāla's capture of Kanchi, because the Chola Karikāla is associated, in the Sangam literature so called, with a succession of rulers extending over three or four generations. during which since his conquest Kanchi remained a Chola viceroyalty. The provision of an interval of that length before Kumāravishnu II retook Kanchi would be on the face of it impossible. Karikāla is supposed to have introduced the arts of agriculture and civilization into the bulk of the region constituting Tondamandalam, and the vicerovality was held with distinction by Chola princes immediately following him and subsequently by an illegitimate scion of the Chola family, Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan, before it passed into the possession of the Pallavas of the inscriptions. There is not the slightest hint of all this in the various charters, of which we have information, and Bappa Deva's civilizing effort in the region farther north seems almost to indicate an extension of the effort of Karikala. Looked at from any point of view therefore, it seems impossible to postulate a Chola interregnum in the middle of the succession of Pallava rulers of the Sanskrit charters and the effort seems to us futile. We have almost fifteen generations of rulers subsequent to the Samudragupta invasion. Although we cannot be very definite about the order of succession or of the detailed history of the period, the general trend seems clear enough to rule out the possibility of this interregnum. There is the evidence of the Sangam literature by itself and the evidence of the later Pandya charters leading thereto, and they seem alike to negative this possibility. Whether the Sangam actually existed or no, the existence of something like a Sangam and of a body of literature known as Sangam literature came to be an accepted article of faith among the Tamils at the commencement of the seventh century A.D. among the Tevaram hymners like Appar and Sambandar. For a tradition like that to grow and for a body of literature to get thus distinctly classified, we do require a certain efflux of time, and that could not be less than half a dozen generations or more, and thus the indication seems to be that the period of the Sangam literature will have to be referred to a time anterior to the advent of the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters into the region of Kanchi. A Chola interregnum associated with the name of Karikāla in the generations immediately preceding Kumāravishnu II seems impossible of justification. The period of the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters marks the advent of a new dynasty, their long, but fairly successful, struggle against hostile occupation of the territory of Tondamandalam, probably by the Kalabhras, their assertion of their overlordship over the Gangas, and a similar recognition of their overlordship at any rate, by the Kadambas after a struggle ending in the final establishment of the Pallava authority there till Simhavarman, the father of Simhavishnu the first Great Pallava, founded a dynasty of powerful rulers for the next two centuries and a half, all require the couple of centuries that are left between the invasion of Samudragupta and the accession of Simhavarman, the father of Simhavishnu. The accession of these powerful rulers to authority in this region is almost coeval with the rise of the Chālukvas into view in the region north of their territory.

The origin of the Chāļukyas and their accession to power in the period with which their name is associated is somewhat obscure. Their habitual hostility to the Pallavas and the constant warfare between the two that this hostility brought about are facts recognized all round, although the reason for this constant hostility has been far from clear. The one is perhaps to some extent associated with the other, and an explanation of the hostility does not seem altogether beyond recovery. In the traditional stories connected with their origin, the historians of the dynasty or the heraldic custodians of their traditional origin gave them credit for association with the Ikshvākus of Ayodhya. Whatever the reason the association with Ikshvakus seems to have been fashionable even in this distant south at this particular time. The Chālukvas connect themselves with the Ikshvākus and some well-known Ikshvāku rulers figure in Choia genealogies when they began to appear. Even before the days of genealogies, the Tondaman ruler of Kanchi is associated with some of the Ikshvakus in one of the Sangam classics. So the Chālukya's claim to an association with the Ikshvākus, while historically possible because of the existence of Ikshvaku rulers in their neighbourhood in the Andhra country, still remains unproved in the face of the fact that they have to invent a kind of explanation, at the very best unsatisfactory, for the name Chālukva. This defect seems to make them an indigenous dynasty of feudatory rulers, who raised themselves to power gradually, and set themselves up independently. The fact of their obscure origin coupled with the boar ensign on the one hand, and the impossible derivation of the word from Sanskrit on the other, seem alike to indicate a southern origin for them on a reasonable basis. Feudatory dynasties placed in rule over the less hospitable regions of the Tamil country went by the name generally Velpula Arasar or Salukku Vendar. They were given the flag of the boar indicative of the nature of the territory over which they ruled and of the character of that rule. It is a family of chieftains like this probably that ultimately raised themselves to a position of higher dignity that became the Chalukyas of a later period. That this is so is reflected in the term sometimes being used in the form Salki, used as a term of contempt with reference to Salki Bhima, who is spoken of

as a disloyal person. These petty chieftains seem to have risen first to power in the northern region of the Vākātaka territory, perhaps in succession to the Nalas, or, at any rate, as one of the tributaries along with them. They then gradually spread southwards, extending their territory, and under the sons of Pulikesan I, they conquered the Kadambas and the Gangas and so extended their operations gradually as to come into contact with the territory of the Pallavas with the set object of recovering the southern block of the territory under the Andhras included in the viceroyalty of Banavasi. It was stated already that the Pallavas probably laid claim to this very territory on the basis of a marriage, and naturally, therefore, the two powers had a reason for perpetual hostility on an important, and at the same time, a vulnerable frontier for both of them. Therefore it is that since the Chalukyas established their power by the conquest of the Nalas, the Mauryas and the Kadambas, they are seen in the full tide of their hostility to the Pallavas and this hostility continued, now the one, now the other getting the better, till one of the dynasties, the Chalukyas vanished from Dakhan politics. That accounts for the Chalukya invasion in the reign of Mahendravarman, who from his headquarters beat them back, and left it to his son to carry the war into the enemy's country, destroy their capital and bring about an interregnum, which lasted for thirteen years. This happened at the end of the reign of Pulikesan II, and his son Vikramaditya was able to turn the tables upon the Pallavas and carry the war into their territory by a flank movement, so as to fight on the banks of the Kaveri near Trichinopoly against the Pallavas supported by all the Tamil powers this time. One of his successors was able to carry the war into Kanchi itself, occupied the town in his turn, and, instead of destroying it, as the Pallava Narasimhavarman had done at Vätāpi, their capital, not merely restored, but even made a fresh donation to the temple, showing thus distinctly that he was more humane in warfare than perhaps the Southern power. It is in revenge for this insult that Nandivarman Pallavamalla took the tide on the turn when, on the occasion of a marriage alliance brought about diplomatically between the Ganga princess, the daughter of Śrī Purusha Muttarasa, and the Pandyan prince, Nedum-Śadaiyan Parantaka, the donor of the Velvikudi plates, the Pallavas led the combination of the southern powers, in which the Pandyan minister got distinction, and inflicted a crushing defeat upon the Chālukyas at the battle of Venbai. varman II was so thoroughly defeated that the Chalukya power found it impossible to recover from the defeat. It is this again that was taken advantage of by the feudatory Rashtrakūta Dantidurga, himself, the son of a Chalukya princess to subvert the Chalukya power. He was able to do this by fortifying himself by an alliance with the great Pallava ruler Nandi to whom perhaps he gave his daughter in marriage and thus brought about his own elevation and the subversion of the dynasty of the early Chāļukyas. The battle of Venbai is graphically described in detailing the achievements of the agnapati, Māran-Kāri of Karavandapuram at whose instance the grant was made. Tirumangai Alvar's reference to Rashtrakūta Dantidurga, under his title Vairamēgha, and the deferential treatment which Nandivarman Pallavamalla is said to have accorded to him finds justification in this and the question how the early Chāļukyas were ultimately overthrown and the Rastrakūtas established themselves in their stead is now put on a clear footing.

The accession of Nandivarman Pallavamalla to the Pallava throne and how it actually happened have alike remained a problem in Pallava history till recently. The publication of some of the Vaikuntha Perumāl temple epigraphs¹ clears the doubt completely, though it does not altogether dispel the darkness that surrounded the actual character of his accession to power. From theepigraphs, it is clear that, when Paramēśvaravarman died, for some reason or other, the great citizens of the land had to be on the look out for a suitable successor. The position of the Pallavas at the time was far from easy. After some futile efforts they ultimately made up their minds to offer it to Hiranyavarma the collateral cousin through the younger brother of Simhavishnu; but Hiranya shrank from the responsibility as an old man and offered the chance to each one of his four sons in turn. The three elder ones refused the responsibility and the youngest of them all, Pallavamalla by name, or Parameśvaravarman Pallavamalla, agreed to accept the responsibility with an alacrity which was disconcerting to the father's paternal instincts. He was however allowed to succeed, and, when he reached Kanchi, he was duly installed under the title Nandivarman. Hence his full style Nandivarman Pallavamalla or Paramēśvaran Pallavamalla alias Nandivarman. This gives colour to some of the hymns of Tirumangai Álvar which celebrate the temple as Paramesvara-Vinnagaram. It cannot now be taken that the Vishnin temple was founded by Parameśvaravarman II, nor even by Paramesvaravarman I. It now becomes quite clear that the founder of this temple is the Pallava prince to whom the Alvar makes so many direct references. All of them refer to Nandivarman Pallavamalla in his family name Paramesvaravarman. That apart, the accession, according to these records is a peaceful one by the choice of the people and therefore come to legitimately. But there are other charters which broadly state, as is recounted in the following pages. that he came to the throne as a result of fighting and by an act of usurpation. The two statements it is possible to reconcile. and it is hardly necessary to take them as irreconcilable alternatives. The facts seem to have been these. A Chalukya invasion seems to have been imminent, and the constant hostility of this power on the northern frontier together with the rising activity of the Pandyas in the south made the position of the Pallavas in the middle one of extreme anxiety. The maintenance of the Pallava power intact meant a Janus-faced fight. south against the Pandyas and north against the Chalukyas. When Paramesvaravarman II died, if the responsible people of the kingdom felt that the ruler that succeeded him should be a man of ability and resource, and not a child succeeding a comparatively inefficient rule of a father, their offer of the throne to Hiranyavarman, possibly a veteran administrator at the time, would have valid justification on the basis of the fitness of the person. The legitimate successor, Chitramaya, or, whoever he was, may have been comparatively young and weak; and even later, the fight that could be put up in his favour does not appear to have been strong enough to make this assumption unwarranted. It was a useful change though the actual successor happened to be a young boy of twelve. supported as he must have been with all the resources of his father and brothers, and other officers of the kingdom. Those whose sympathies were on the legitimist side would naturally call such a succession an act of usurpation, while to those of the opposite faction Nandivarman's acceptance of the office was an honourable act of public beneficence for the well-being of the State. The thirteen or fourteen epigraphs that have been published throw very important light upon this position, and from these, what has hitherto been known regarding this succession receives fresh illumination. Nandivarman probably came to the throne and accepted the responsibility that it involved, by the invitation of those responsible for the welfare of the state, necessarily setting aside the legitimate claims of another prince of the family. The war which was a consequence necessarily, went against the legitimate prince, but the actual achievements of the general in behalf of Nandivarman seem fully to justify the anxiety of those who went out of their way to set aside the legitimate successor in favour of another. It need not therefore be the fault of Nandivarman Pallavamalla that he ascended the throne, not an act of his own, and merely for the sake of the position or the power that it carried with it. Though his earlier years were clouded by these wars, he managed to tide over these troubles both by successful war and by equally successful diplomacy, subverting the natural enemy, the Chalukyas in the north, and entering into a more or less permanent alliance with their successors, the Rāshtrakūtas; on the south, he got into perhaps a treaty of alliance with the Pandyas, after a good deal of fight with them on behalf of the rulers of Kongu, whose independence all his efforts could not sustain. When he died, his kingdom could pass down to his son without any difficulty and Pallava rule continued for another three or four generations, for almost a century, without distress.

² S.I.I., vol. iv, pp. 10-12.

XXX

There has been considerable discussion in regard to the successors of Nandivarman Pallavamalla and a controversy has raged over the fancied displacement of the dynasty and by the succession of a new dynasty called till recently by the epigraphists (Ganga-Pallavas.) Inscriptions published since this hypothesis was put forward seem entirely to negative the position taken and with the information at our disposal now, there is hardly any need to maintain the hypothesis, whatever iustification it might have had in its origin. Nandivarman was succeeded by Dantivarman his son, Dantivarman by another Nandivarman, and then followed Nrpatunga in a regular line of succession, all of them tracing their descent through Nandivarman Pallavamalla. Why a certain number of these should be distinctly marked off and given the name Ganga-Pallavas is far from clear. That there was some kind of a family connection between the Gangas and the Pallavas may be readily admitted. That is a connection which the Pallavas had with other royal families as well, namely, those of the Rashtrakutas and the Kadambas, taking the dynasty of Nandivarman Pallavamalla alone. A marriage alliance of this sort need not give a new direction unless we can specifically prove that a scion of the Ganga family through a daughter even, or through a Pallava princess set up rule in the territory of the Pallavas. For this, we have absolutely no lead. Comparatively minor changes in the titles of rulers at a certain stage of their history, or of the existence of a number of rulers simultaneously in the same territory, are not reasons that would justify a hypothesis as grave as this. What seems actually to have taken place is this. The Pallava-Pandya struggle in the time of the great Pallavamalla seems to have been more or less for the overlordship of Kongu to begin with. At some period of his reign that overlordship, if it was at any time exercised by the Pallavamalla at all, passed over to the Pandyas. To fortify this position, they entered into a marriage alliance with the Gangas across the Kongu frontier and this brought down upon them a great Chālukya invasion, as the Gangas were perhaps regarded as Chālukya feudatories at the time. Feudatory or no, the Gangas in alliance with the Pandvas would be a real danger on the flank of the Chalukya, having regard to the fact that they regarded the Pallavas as their standing enemies. That brought on the battle of Venbai which had for its ultimate result the subversion of the dynasty of the Chālukyas and the establishment, in their stead, of the rule of the Rāshtrakūtas who apparently fortified their position by an alliance with the Pallavas. This for the time settled the question of the political relationship between the Gangas, the Rāshtrakūtas and the Pallavas. Later on the wars continued between the Pandyas and the Pallayas on the one side, and hostility gradually developed between the Pallavas and the Räshtrakütas on the other. The Gangas in the middle now played the one part, now the other, till at last they were ultimately reduced to a position of subordination by the Rāshtrakūtas. This certainly was one element of weakness in the Pallavas. The Pandyas in consequence were slowly gaining the upper hand, and tightened their hold on the Pallavas, so that the Pallava territory which had at one time been so very extensive, was gradually shrinking to one of comparatively parrow dimensions. The final victory achieved by Varaguna II at Sripurambyam near Kumbakonam gave a crushing blow, if not the death blow, to the Pallava power, in which one section of the Gangas, the Gangas who held authority in the Bana country, assisted the Pallavas. But the Pallavas still continued in a comparatively precarious position. This precarious condition of the Pallava power, as in the case of all other Indian imperial powers, brought about a dismemberment, which began usually with an independence of the provinces constituting the empire more or less definite, and this dismemberment is what is in evidence in our having a certain number of rulers in the Pallava territory, each issuing inscriptions, almost on his own authority simultaneously, when the power of the Cholas, newly come into existence under Vijayalaya, advanced northwards under his successor Aditya, and put an end to the crumbling empire of the Pallavas and annexed the whole of their territory to their own dominions, thus introducing a new overlordship, which was symbolized by the name Jayamkondacholamandalam given to the Pallava terrritory which till then was known Tondamandalam. The existence therefore of several Pallava princes marks nothing more than a mere stage in the dismemberment of the kingdom or empire, and need not be regarded as the establishment of a separate dynasty of rulers distinct from the one who held rule from Kanchi. That seems the general trend of Pallava History, which Mr. Gopalan's work indicates. The purpose of this introduction is merely to supply a few gaps in the narrative, and thus to provide the few links required for the continuous story of the rise, growth, decay and the dissolution of the power of the Pallavas of Kanchi.

Mr. Gopalan has done the work with care and discrimination and has succeeded in providing a readable account of this interesting and extensive period of South Indian History, which, it is hoped, would be found useful by those interested in the subject.

S. KRISHNASWAMI AIYANGAR,

MARINE VILLA', Professor of Indian History and Archaelogy, October 15, 1928. University of Madras,

THE HISTORY OF THE PALLAVAS OF SOUTH INDIA

A.D. 200 to 900

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTORY,
HISTORY OF PREVIOUS RESEARCH AND SOURCES OF HISTORY FOR THE PALLAVAS

THE materials for writing a history of the Pallava kings of South India were until almost recent times exceedingly scanty and otherwise inadequate. They are moreover distorted by erroneous traditions and misleading accounts of mythical ancestry. A hundred years ago hardly any of their inscriptions on stone or on copper-plates, of which we have such large numbers now, were known. This becomes evident on a perusal of the Mackenzie Collection of MSS, relating to South Indian history which, mentioning dozens of members of the Chola, Pandya and other dynasties of early South India, do not mention a single name of any of the members of the Pallaya dynasty which had remained the dominant South Indian power for about seven centuries. This is remarkable seeing that the Pallavas wielded sovereign authority for several centuries in the Tamil land. Literary tradition embodied in the hymns of the Alvars, and in the works Nandikkalambakam, the Periyapuranam, Chintamani, Avantisundarikathasara, etc., are far too scanty for historical purposes though they give a glowing idea of the culture of the Pallava period.

History of Research on the Pallavas.—The late Sir Walter Elliot did remarkable service for the cause of South Indian historical research by the publication of some early South Indian inscriptions in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society 1 and in the Madras Journal of Literature and Science 2 as early as 1837. An important starting-point was made in his announcement in 1858 that in the sixth century, the Pallava kings were dominant in South India. earlier than this, in 1844, he had discovered that the monoliths in the Seven Pagodas were excavated by Pallava kings. At the same time Dr. Burnell succeeded in deciphering some of the inscriptions at this place belonging to Pallava kings. These inscriptions are included in Capt. Carr's wellknown collection of papers on the Seven Pagodas. Another important contribution to Pallava history is the work of James Pergusson, History of Indian and Eastern Architecture, in which after a minute examination of the monuments at the Seven Pagodas he has attributed them to the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. But it was the second half of the last century that saw the discovery of numerous and important copperplate charters and stone inscriptions belonging to this dynasty, which for the first time opened the eyes of scholars to the historical importance of this celebrated dynasty of kings, ruling in a part of the Tamil and Telugu country. This discovery has practically revolutionized the prevalent notions concerning Pallava history. The earliest of these records was edited by the late Dr. Fleet in the Indian Antiouary in its earlier numbers, with notes and translations. Towards the close of the last century stone inscriptions of this dynasty began to be discovered in various parts of the Tamil land along with a large number of Pallava monuments other than those found at Mahābalipuram. These records coupled with the inscriptions on the copper-plate charters form the most valuable raw material for the reconstruction of Pallava history. Many of the records have been edited, with great ability and learning, by Hultzsch, Venkayya, Fleet, Kielhorn, Krishna Sastri and others in the pages of the Indian Antiquary, South Indian Inscriptions and the Epigraphia Indica. The stone inscriptions and copper-plate records discovered year after year are noticed in the Annual Reports ion South Indian Epigraphy with notes and comments.

¹ vol. iv, pp. 1-11.

The first connected account of the Pallava kings was attempted more than forty years ago by the late Dr. Fleet in his Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, which forms a part of the Bombay Gazetteer, where he has exploited for the first time all the records, inscriptions on stone and copper-plates. relating to the Pallavas which were accessible to him. The outline account of Dr. Fleet, though written so long ago, still remains in its main aspects authoritative and represents more or less the first attempt to write a scientific history of these kings. The next notable attempt to sketch the origin and history of the Pallavas was made by the late Mr. V. Venkayya in the Archaelogical Annual Survey Report for 1906-7.1 is a scholarly piece of research work on the subject, and embodies the author's life-long labours in the field of epigraphy and literature. This work written in 1906 takes into consideration the inscriptions and copper-plates discovered since the days when Dr. Fleet wrote, and the author's researches in the field of Tamil literature are also fully utilized. In many respects this account still remains an authority on the subject.

The next important work on the Pallavas is that of Prof. G. Jouveau-Dubreuil published in 1917. In this work the author has embodied the results of his independent research, and has propounded several original and ingenious theories regarding the origin, chronology, genealogy, art and architecture of the Pallavas. The author has succeeded, to a large extent, in establishing a connection between the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters and the members of the Sanskrit records, and has attacked the intricate problem of their chronology and genealogy with critical ability. Many of the conclusions are based on the author's personal investigation which have resulted in the discovery of several new inscriptions and monuments hitherto unknown. The other papers and monographs of the same author, such as those on 'the Pallava Antiquities', 'Pallava-painting', form important contributions to the subject and offer several new interpretations of parts of the subject. His latest work entitled the Ancient History of the Deccan embodies the author's latest views on the Pallavas, their origin and chronology.

Among other writers on the subject Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar has published a valuable account of 'The Origin and Early History of the Pallavas' in the Journal of Indian History, 1 then published in Allahabad. This contribution represents the author's latest investigations on this subject, and, having been published in 1923 is the most recent work on the subject of an authoritative character. A large number of papers on the inscriptions, monuments and literature of the period appeared in various journals, some of these being contributed by Mr. Gopinatha Rao on 'the Ganga-Pallavas,' Mr. K. V. Subramanya Aiyar, on 'the Ancient History of Conjeevaram' published in the Madras Christian College Magazine, 'the Literary History of the Pallava Age' by Mr. Rangaswami Sarasvati in the Journal of the Mythic Society and the 'Antiquities of Mahabalipuram' by Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar. Some of the historical portions of the district manuals contain accounts of varying value about the Pallavas, while more recently accounts have also been published in Tamil, the most notable of these being that of Mr. P. T. Srinivasa Aiyangar, entitled A History of the Pallavas.

Sources of HISTORY

Epigraphy.—Of the sources of information for writing the history of the Pallavas, epigraphy occupies a prominent place compared with the other sources. Dr. Fleet has pointed out, 'We are ultimately dependent on the inscriptions in every line of Indian research.' This is especially true of the history of the Pallavas, for without the inscriptions it is practically impossible to know anything about these kings and their times. We may divide the Pallava inscriptions1 conveniently into three classes. To the first class belong records written entirely in Prakrit. The second class of records comprises Sanskrit inscriptions, while the third class consists of those in Sanskrit and Tamil. Of these, the records of the first class probably belong to the earliest period, as it is now recognized that Prakrit was superseded by Sanskrit about the fourth century A.D., while the earliest 'Grantba-Tamil' records of the Pallavas have been assigned to the seventh century. Most of these records are of a donative character. Their object was to record the gifts of lands or money to temples or Brahmans. The most important portion of the records was the specification of the details of the names of the donor, the donee and the donation of the particular gift. From very early times the records give a certain amount of genealogical information and a recital of events was introduced to magnify the glory and importance of the donors. Thus, for instance, the Prakrit charters such as those of Sivaskandavarman contained hardly any allusion to historical events connected with the donor. Gradually however we find a change. The Sanskrit charters beginning from about the fifth century not only enumerate the father and the grandfather of the donor, but some of them, such as the Kūram, Kašākkudi, the Vēlūrpāļayam and the Bāhūr plates. give a long account of the names of previous kings and their achievements. 'Thus,' as Fleet says, 'not with the expressed object of preserving history, but in order to intensify the importance of everything connected with religion and to secure grantees in the possession of properties conveyed to them, there was gradually accumulated almost the whole mass of epigraphic records from which chiefly, the ancient history of India is now being put together.'2

Stone Inscriptions.—Stone inscriptions beginning from the seventh century, so far as this dynasty is concerned, form a distinct class by themselves. These records which are fairly abundant for the later Pallava period are for the most part, donative in character, though one or two of them such as the Väyalur pillar inscription of Rajasimha, and the Panamalai inscription of the same king give a genealogical account. Some are short, and record gifts to religious or other institutions, and they are invariably dated in the regnal year of the contemporary king without reference to any era. They are mostly in prose, though a few of these are to be found also in verse such as the inscription at the Pallava rock-cut temple at Dalavanur of King Mahendravarman I. earliest of these are those written in some of the rock-cut temples believed to have been excavated by Mahendravarman I. such as the one at Vallam.2 Many of these rock-cut temples such as those at Pallavaram, Trichinopoly, Mandagappattu, Mamandur contain Grantha and Grantha-Tamil inscriptions some of which are contemporaneous with the caves and have for their object the simple recording of the excavation of these monuments. The copper-plate charters taken along with these stone inscriptions furnish valuable information as regards the history and chronology of the Pallava kings. In spite of the serious disadvantage that these records are not dated in any of the known eras but only in the regnal years of the king, a careful study of the palæography of these inscriptions makes it possible to fix their age more or less accurately. The facts obtained from these records, coupled with those of the contemporary kings with whom the Pallavas came into contact enable us to reconstruct to a great extent the history of the age of the Pallavas. The most important of these contemporary records are those of the Western-Gangas, the Western Chāļukyas, the Pāndyas as well as the minor dynasties such as those of the Muttaraiyan and the Bana subordinates of the later Pallava kings.

¹ Vide Appendix (A).

² Fleet, Bom. Gaz., vol. i, pt. ii, p. 62.

Pallava Monuments.—Side by side with the inscriptions we have the Paliava monuments themselves. According to one set of scholars whose enthusiasm for their subject hampers them from taking a dispassionate view, the study of architecture constitutes an even more important instrument for fixing dates than the study of palæography and inscriptions. According to Mr. A. H. Longhurst for instance, * the present method of relying entirely on inscriptions for fixing the dates of ancient monuments adopted by Dr. Hultzsch and others is open to objection because when this method of investigation is employed alone, serious mistakes may occur. It is possible that inscriptions on a monument may have been inscribed long after it was erected. In such cases the inscription would not only give no information about the original author of the monument but may even lead us into error. Then again if the study of architecture is neglected. how is the epigraphist going to determine the age of the monument that does not possess any inscription? '1 This is a reply to the point of view of Prof. Hultzsch who in his paper on the 'Inscriptions of the Seven Pagodas'2 wrote :-. The important question of the authors and the dates of these excavations can be answered only by a careful study of their inscriptions engraved on them.' Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil is inclined to agree with Mr. Longhurst, and attaches greater importance to the study of architecture for the determination of dates than to that of the inscriptions. In his work on the Pallava Antiquities the author enters into a minute examination of the evolution of the Pallava style in the course of the Pallava age, and distinguishes various styles even during comparatively short intervals of time.

¹ Ep. Ind., vol. xil, p. 225. ² S. I. I., vol. ii, p. 34.

During the last thirty years a large number of Pallava monuments have been discovered at Mahēndravādi, Daļavānūr-Šīyamangalam, Pallāvaram, Trichinopoly, Kīļmāvilangai, Šingavaram, Tirukkaļukkunram, Vallam, Māmandūr, Mandagapattu, Mēlachēri, Sittannavāsal and Mahābalipuram. Some of these consist of rock-cut caves and bear Pallava inscriptions. Others consist of structural temples such as the Kailāsanātha temple at Kānchīpuram and the Shore temple at the Seven

¹ M.A.R. for 1918-19, p. 20. ² Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 2.

Pagodas. Many of these monuments were brought into existence by the Pallava kings and contain their inscriptions. The inscriptions on the Rathas of Mahabalipuram contain some specific references in the shape of the names and surnames of some of the kings. The most important of this class of epigraphs are those on the Dharmaraiaratha and the Kailäsanātha temple at Mahābalipuram and Conjeevaram respectively. These temples are dedicated to the Hindu Triad; while the cave temples are dedicated to Siva or Vishnu, the presence of representations of Brahma the other member of the Hindu Triad, forms a peculiar feature of these monuments which distinguishes them from later temples. The Adivaraha temple at the Seven Pagodas contains statues of the celebrated kings Simbavishnu and Mahendravarman I in bas-relief. Similarly the rock-cut temple at the top of the Trichinopoly rock appears to have originally contained a statue of Mahendravarman I, a fact which seems to be alluded to in the inscription discovered there.1 But the statue is not to be found there now, and may have been destroyed subsequently. Recently Mr. Longhurst has been fortunate in discovering at Bhairavakonda 2 (Nellore District) a large group of temples attributable to the Pallava age, all of them cut out of rock and closely resembling the Mahendra caves. There are also a large number of Pallava monuments in South India without bearing any inscription. Further study and research may help in establishing their actual age.

LITERATURE

Next to inscriptions we might consider the testimony of literature and literary tradition. For the earliest period of the history of the Tamil land we are almost entirely dependent on a class of Tamil works known as the Sangain classics and attributable to the first and second centuries of the Christian era. The age of the Sangain has been the subject of keen ¹ S. I. I., vol. i, pp. 28-30.

* M.A.R. for 1920-21, pp. 29-32.

discussion among scholars, and attempts have been made to bring it to the seventh and the eighth centuries. The late Mr. Swamikannu Pillai working from the astronomical details in the eleventh Paripadal arrived at the conclusion, in his Indian Ephemeris, that the author of the piece must have lived in the seventh century. But the generally accepted date, namely, first and the second centuries A.D., seems established on satisfactory grounds, and the new dates have so far not been proved to be beyond doubt correct. The orthodox estimate of the Sangam age expounded by the late Mr. Kanakasabhai Pillai and more fully by Dr. S. Krishnaswami

Aiyangar has been followed here.

The Sangam works although they mention several kings and chieftains in the Tamil land contain no mention of the Pallavas (even where they actually describe Kānchi), or of any member of the various Pallava dynasties known to us from inscriptions. The inference seems, therefore, to be fully justified that the Pallava kings reigned after the age of these Sangam works. Otherwise it is difficult to understand the silence of these works about the dynasty of the Pallavas of Kanchi especially as we learn from them that the region around Kānchi was ruled over by Tondamān-Ham-Tiraiyan, one of the Chola viceroys. The Sangam works however mention a people known as the Tondaiyar among others who are sometimes considered to be the same as, or closely related to, the Pallavas.2 But the available evidence does not seem sufficient to warrant our identifying the Tondaiyar with the Pallavas as the former term appears to be a tribal name like the Aruvalar, Vadavar, etc., while Pallava looks more like a family name than that of a tribe. One Sangam work called Perumbanarrupadai, written by Rudran-Kannanār who has also celebrated the Chola king Karikāla and his capital town Kaveripattinam, is mainly devoted to a description of the condition of Känchi during the rule of Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan who appears to have preceded the vol. i, p. 108. * Ind. Ant , vol. lii, pp. 75-80.

Pallava kings at Kānchi and who, according to certain scholars, was an early Pallava king. With the exception of this poem the other pieces in the Sangam works do not contain any reference either to Kanchi during the age of the Pallavas or about the Pallavas themselves. Suggestions have been put forward that the Pallavas were foreigners to the south, that the Pallava power was superimposed upon the Tamil land, and that the Tamils therefore scrupulously omitted to mention them, and, even when they did so, mentioned them with contempt. As an illustration the definition in the Pingalandai which gives us the synonyms for the Pallavas, includes terms such as Kayavar, Palakar and Nisar. But against this it must be said that this reference does not apply to the Pallava kings who are referred to in the Tevaram hymns and in the works of some of the Vaishnava Alvars of the eighth century in terms of praise.1

In addition to the references in the hymns of the Saiva and Vaishnava saints about these kings new light is thrown on the age of Simhavishnu in one of the recently-discovered Sanskrit works entitled the Avantisundarikathasara which, in its historical introduction, not only contains an important synchronism between Simhavishnu of Kānchī, Vishņuvardhana, the early Chālukya, and Durvinita, the early Ganga.2 This work also gives valuable particulars relating to the literary history of the Pallava age and the patronage of the Pallava kings. The association of Dandin as well as Bharavi with the Pallava court at Kanchi, which this work establishes, is very important for understanding the nature of Pallava culture during this period.3

Of a similar nature is the discovery of the work Mattavilasa-Prahasana, a burlesque written by the Pallava king Mahendravarman I, which depicts vividly the contemporary life of religious sects such as the Śākyabikshus and Kāpalikas

¹ Periya-Tirumoli, ii, 9.

^a Special note by Editor.

^a See the Age of Bharavi and Dandin, Q.J.M.S., vol. xii, p. 10 and the Second All Ind. Orl. Conf., 1922, Proc., pp. 194, 306-7.

in the city, and of which glimpses are obtainable in the hymns of the Alvars and the Nayanmars in some of the Prabandha and the Tevaram hymns. This work has recently been published by the Travancore Government.1 There seems to be no doubt that the author of this play Sri Mahendravikramavarman is identical with the Pallava king Mahendravarman known, from inscriptions and copper-plates, to have reigned in the first quarter of the seventh century. A recently-discovered panel in the Adivaraha temple in the Seven Pagodas represents him with his two queens, their identity being placed beyond question by the inscriptions over the reliefs.2 Some of his titles such as Avanibhajana, Gunabhara, Satrumalla, Mattavilāsa, found in the various cave temples excavated by him, occur in the course of the play. Detailed reference will be made to the work in the section on the literature of the Pallava age.

Among literary works that throw light upon the Pallava age in Tamil, Nandikkalambakam deserves prominent mention. This work which consists of about a hundred and odd verses is devoted to a description of the exploits of Nandivarman III, whose death the author laments in the course of the work. A number of verses in the poem describe the martial exploits of this sovereign, his patronage of letters, his capital cities, the extent of territory, and other particulars which together give a detailed record of his reign. The author is regarded by tradition as one of the younger brothers of the king himself although this is considered doubtful. The work has been for a long time out of print and is noticed in some detail in the section dealing with literature of the Pallava age.

To these may be added the Digambara Jaina work called Lokavibhaga³ discovered and noticed by R. Narasimhacharya till recently Director of the Mysore Archæological Department. It furnishes us with an important chronological datum from which the initial year of one of the early Pallaya kings Simhavarman may be fixed. The work consists of eleven prakaranas, the last being mokshabhaga. The opening verse is in praise of Jinesvara. The second verse gives, kshētra, kala, tērtha, pramāņa-purusha and their charita as the five divisions of a purana; and in the third verse the author begins his subject, namely, the description of the world. the MSS, of this work contain four stanzas which are important to Pallava chronology. The first stanza tells us that the science was first taught by Vardhamana to Sudharma and others, that it was handed down in succession through a series of teachers, and that it was translated into Sanskrit by Rishi Simbasuri. The second stanza says that at a particular period, corresponding to certain planetary positions, Sarvanandi copied the work in the village named Pātalika of the Pāņarāshţra. The third stanza gives us Saka 380, corresponding to the twenty-second regnal year of Simhavarman, king of Känchi, as the year in which the work was completed. The fourth stanza informs us that the work consists of 1536 anushtub slokas. Saka 380 is apparently the year in which the copying work was completed by Sarvanandi, and the author of the work Simhasūri probably flourished at an earlier period. Calculation shows that there cannot be any doubt about the correctness of the date. Pāţalika, the village in which Sarvanandi copied the work, is identical with Patalipura in South Arcot District at which, according to the Periyapuranam, there was a large Jaina monastery in the seventh century A.D.

¹ Trivandrum Sanskrit Series, No. LV.

⁹ Special note by Editor. ⁹ Mys. Archl. Rep. for 1909-10, p. 45,

In addition to these sources we have the account given about the Tamil land, and the city of Káñchī in particular, by the celebrated Chinese pilgrim and the Master of the Law, Hinen Tsang, whose work has the advantage of being a contemporary account. The pilgrim appears to have visited Kāñchī about A.D. 640. The city having had the reputation of being a seat of Buddhistic learning and the city of birth of the celebrated Dharmapāla who preceded Šīlabhadra at the Nalanda University, the pilgrim spent a considerable time in it. Although he does not mention anything about the contemporary king or court, he has given an account of his impressions relating to the character of the people, soil, climate, temples and the state of Buddhism in the city.

To these sources must be added the Mahāvamsa, the Ceylon Chronicle written in Pāļi and giving the earliest known account of the kings of the island. This work is particularly useful for settling the chronology of early South Indian history as it describes the relations and the contact that existed between the kings of Ceylon and those who ruled in the Tamil land. So far as the Pallavas are concerned we find that in the days of Narasimhavarman I as well as in the closing days of the Pallava empire invasions of the island were undertaken by Pallava kings either on behalf of the ruling sovereign or actuated by love of conquest merely. Chapter 47 of this work is particularly interesting as it gives a glimpse into Pallava oversea enterprise in early times.

Next comes tradition, living tradition, about the Pallavas and their age. It is surprising that the memory of the Pallava kings, although perpetuated in the names given after them to dozens of temples such as Parameśvaravinnagaram, Rajasimhēšvara, Kshatriyasimhapallavēšvara, Šatrumallēšvarālaya, Mahēndravishņugrha and to many places, has been forgotten and their good work lost sight of. Names of places such as Pallavaram, Pallavanichharam, Nandipuravinnagaram, Paramēśvaramangalam, Mahēndramangalam, Mahēndravādi, Mahāmallapuram clearly indicate that these were either founded or named after the kings bearing these names in the Pallava dynasty. In view of all this it is surprising that the memory of the dynasty has not survived to any appreciable extent in living tradition. The Mackenzie Manuscripts collected about a century ago by the indefatigable Surveyor-General, Col. Colin Mackenzie, although containing many accounts of the early history of the Pandyas, Chōlas, Gangas, Mahrattas and others do not contain any account relating to the dynasty of the Pallavas. But some of the accounts professing to give the Ancient History of Tondamandalam and the exploits of Adondaichakravarti seem to preserve a distant reminiscence of what the people of the early part of the nineteenth century believed to have been the ancient condition of Tondamandalam, by which name the region immediately around Känchipuram was known. This class of traditional accounts preserved in the Mackenzie collection appears to depict the condition of Tondamandalam prior to the days of Pallava advent. Some of them, such as the account of Tondaman-chakravarti, relate to the conquest of the region from a rude and uncivilized tribe known as the Kurumbas and to the introduction of civilization by Adondaichola. There seems to be warrant for presuming that this person was no other than Tondaman-Ilath-Tiraiyan who is immortalized in the Perumbanarrupadai by Rudran-Kannanar. If so the Mackenzie collections may be taken as lending support to the view that the region of the Pallavas was under Chola occupation before the Pallavas came from the north. The circumstances under which the Pallava conquest of the Chola region was brought about are not known.

CHAPTER II

THEORIES OF THE ORIGIN OF THE PALLAVAS: PRE-PALLAVA HISTORY OF KÄÑCHĪPURA

THE age of the Pallavas in South India may be taken to extend roughly from the third century A.D. to the end of the ninth. Many facts connected with their origin and early history are, in the existing state of historical research, uncertain. Their chronology is yet in the process of construction, and the genealogical order of succession, in spite of the comparative abundance of copper-plate characters, cannot be regarded as having been finally settled. The question of their origin has baffled investigators, European and Indian alike. Ingenious suggestions and theories have been offered for the solution of this enigma by various scholars who occupied themselves with this work.

VARIOUS THEORIES

The theory that held the field until recently, almost undisputed, is known as the Persian or Parthian origin of the Pallavas, and was adopted by the late Vincent Smith in the first edition of his Early History of India. According to the late Mr. Venkayya, who developed this theory elaborately:—

'The Pallavas . . . may, until their origin is satisfactorily established by indisputable evidence, be supposed to be identical with the Pahlavas, Palhavas, and the Pahnavas of the Purāṇas. This identification is based on etymological grounds and supported by the fact that the Palhavas formed a distinct element in the population of Western India early in the second century. Their movement from Western India to the East Coast is not only possible but rendered likely by known historical facts.'1

This theory, however fascinating to the imagination, rests altogether on the superficial verbal resemblance of the words Pahlava and Pallava.2 There is no evidence whatever, as Mr. Venkayya himself admits, that the Pahlavas of the west coast moved into the east anytime during the second century A.D. At any rate there is no reference or reminiscence whatever in the large numbers of Pallava copper-plate inscriptions of any such migration. Mr. Venkayya presumes that it was the war of the Western Satrap Rudradaman, A.D. 150, with the Andhra king Gautamiputra-Śatakarni and his successor, that probably brought about in some manner, now unknown, the eastward movement of the Pahlavas in his service. It is indeed true that the minister of Rudradaman is called Suviśāka and described in the Junagadh inscription as a Pahlava. Ent no evidence of a positive character is available to connect him or his descendants with the Pallava kings of Southern India. For one thing this Pahlava minister of Rudradāman was not a ruling king. He is not moreover mentioned in any of the ancestral genealogical lists of the Pallava kings. In the second edition of his Early History of India Vincent Smith gave up this theory of Pahlaya origin which he had adopted in the earlier edition of Early History of India, with the remark that it is more likely that the Pallavas were a tribe, clan, or caste which was formed in the northern part of the Madras Presidency, possibly in the Vengi country.3 Mr. Venkayya's objection against this view of indigenous origin of Pallavas is the apparent improbability of two tribes, the Pahlava in Western India and the Pallava in the delta of the Godavari, bearing the same name. Some of his other arguments against the indigenous origin of the Pallavas are

A.S.R., 1906-7, p. 221.
It is to be noted however that in Sanskrit orthography Pahlaya with a & can never be confounded with the word Pallava. In the Puranas, as well as in Persian and even in Prakrit the h is distinct. The two words appear to indicate two distinct people. V. A. Smith, E.H.I. (1908 ed.), p. 423.

ingenious and may be stated here. One is that the Pallavas never refer to themselves in their records as belonging either to lunar or solar race like other dynasties of South India such as the Chōlas, Pāndyas, Chālukyas, etc. Another is that none of the kings mentioned in the Purāṇas are to be found in the Pallava genealogy such as Manu, Śibi, Ikshvāku, etc. All these facts according to him, raise a presumption that the Pallavas of Southern India were not an indigenous trībe in the sense that the Chōlas, the Pāndyas and the Cheras were.

Views of L. Rice. - This view of foreign origin was also shared by L. Rice. In his Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions he points out that the Pallava kings of South India were identical with the Pahlavas who, with the Yavanas and Sakas, were destroyed by Gautamiputra-Śātakarpi and that the word Pahlava is a Prakrit form of Parthava meaning Parthian, especially the Arsacidan Parthians.2 As we have already pointed out this conjecture that the Pallavas of the south are identical with the Pahlavas of the west and ultimately with the Parthians and the Persians is based entirely on the similarity of the words Pahlava and Pallava, whereas everything known about the Pallava kings of the south, inscriptions. traditions and monuments indicate that they were a peninsular race; they are probably identical with the class of people described as Tondaiyar in Tamil literature and also familiar as Kādavas or foresters. Vincent Smith totally rejected this theory of foreign origin in the third edition of his Early History of India, and has expressed his conclusion on the subject in the following terms :-

'The name Pallava resembles Pahlava so closely that most writers have been disposed to favour the hypothesis that the Pallavas and the Pahlavas were identical, and that consequently the southern Pallava dynasty of Kanchi should be considered as ultimately of Persian origin. But recent research has failed to adduce any historical facts in support of that notion, and it seems more likely that the Pallavas were an indigenous tribe, clan, or caste.'1

¹ A.S.R., 1906-7, p. 219, foot-note.

² Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions, p. 53,

One important piece of evidence among others 2 which strongly militates against this theory of the foreign origin is that furnished by the poet Rājašēkhara, the great critic, in his account of the geographical division of the people of his times.

This is brought out in full relief by Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar in his dissertation on the Pallavas, wherein discussing the origin of the Pallavas he observes as follows :-

Rajasekhara on the Pallavas .- 'The words " Pahlava" and "Pallava" are philologically one, but we have good authority for taking it that the two terms refer historically to different peoples, thereby illustrating that the partition that separates philology from history is not always very thin. The poet Rājaśēkhara lived in the courts of the Gūrjara sovereigns Mahendrapala and Mahipala about the end of the ninth and the commencement of the tenth centuries A.D. just the period when the Pallavas were passing out of existence as the dominant South Indian power. He is the author-of a geographical work named Bhuvanakosa to which he actually refers for further information in ch. xvii of his Kāvyamīmāmsa. In this work he makes a division of India into five, and allots to each division, the peoples, towns and rivers that belonged to it. In that section he allots the Pallavas to the southern division, or Dakshinapatha, lying beyond Mahishmati, while the Pahlavas he allots to the division Uttarapatha lying beyond Prithudaka.3 This last name the "great water" probably stands for the Indus, and the people Pahlava are found associated with the Huns, Kambhoja, Bahlika, etc. In the estimation, therefore, of Rajasekhara who seems a much travelled man, and has really much interesting information to give of different parts of India in respect at any rate of the cultivation of Sanskrit learning, the Pahlavas and the Pallavas were distinct peoples, one of them belonging to the south and the other to the frontier on the other side of the Indus. Rājaśēkhara, no doubt is a late authority, but undoubtedly

E. H. I. (third edition), p. 469.
 Cf. C. V. Vaidya's views, Mediaval Hindu India, vol. i, p. 280.
 This has been since satisfactorily identified with Pehoa in the Panipet District, and this is in complete accord with the details given in Rājašēkhara. - Ed.

gives expression to the prevailing opinion of his time in regard to these two peoples.'1

Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil's Views.—The view held by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil is only slightly different. Although he does not go the whole extent of advocating the theory of a Parthian origin of the Pallavas he is inclined to connect the early Pallava kings of Conjeevaram with the Pahlavas of Western India. We read for instance in his chapter on the Pallavas in his latest work, The Ancient History of the Decean.

'Up to the present day we have not found any document which proves a Parthian invasion of Southern India. We may say that this theory makes the Pallava mystery still more mysterious.'2

According to him the Pallavas were alien to South India and the early members of this dynasty were not kings. They were neighbours of the Nāgas and Chūţu-Nagas in the days of Rudradāman in the second century. The first Pallava king inherited the throne of Kānchī on marrying the daughter of a Nāga chief by name Šivaskanda-Nāga. On pages 55-56 he elaborates this view and establishes a connection between the Pahlavas of the west coast with the Pallavas of Kānchī. On page 55 of this work he says:—

*.... We learn from the Girnar inscription that Suviśāka who was the minister of Rudradāman in A.D. 150 was a Pahlava.'3

Thus the word which was written Palhava in A.D. 78 was written Pahlava in A.D. 150 and we note when we see the Girnar inscription, that the compound letter 'hla', resembles the double 'll'. Besides in Mayidavolu plates written in Prakrit this question of letters has been solved in a very simple manner, they wrote Pālava. This can correspond to Pallava for in Prakrit the consonants are not doubled. In the Hirahadagalli plates it is written as Pallava though they are also in Prakrit. Later on when the documents were written in Sanskrit the word Pallava would be understood to mean 'sprout'.

¹ J. I. H., vol. ii. pp. 25-26.

Ancient History of the Deccan, p. 47.

³ Junagadh Insc., Ep. Ind., vol. vili, p. 37, plate line 19.

From all this the following conclusion is drawn :-

'The identity of names leads us to think that the ancient kings of Kānchi belonged to the same family as the minister of Rudradāman. He lived in A.D. 150 and we know Pallava kings of Kānchi reigning about A.D. 225.'

Objections to the Theory .- This theory which connects the Pallavas of Kanchi with the Pahlavas of the west coast presents difficulties, some of which have already been pointed out before. In the first place it was seen that there is no evidence whatsoever of an eastward movement of the Pahlavas. There is moreover no evidence of a Pahlava prince marrying the daughter of a Naga chief on which Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil relies for his theory of the attainment of political sovereignty by the Pahlavas. The Velurpalayam plates which mention a Naga alliance 1 do not say that it was the first Pallava king who so attained power. In this record which belongs to the ninth century, he is called Virakurcha and not Sivaskanda. Then again this record mentions many earlier kings such as Asokavarman who ruled before the days of Vîrakûrcha a fact which militates strongly against the view of Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil. The theory does not explain why they came to be called Pallavas. It fails to take into consideration the existence of a people known as Tondaiyar, synonymous with the Sanskrit Pallaya. Moreover early Tamil literature does not support the view that the Pallavas originally emigrated from Surashtra. Finally there is no mention in any of the numerous charters of the Pallava kings and other contemporary kings in South India of Suviśāka the supposed ancestor of the Pallava kings who lived in Rudradaman's court. If he was really connected with the Pallava family of Kānchī how is it that he does not figure even in one of the lists of their ancestors contained in the Pallaya records? It is not again definitely known whether the authority of Sivaskandanaga extended as far south as Tondaimandalam. No inscription or copper-plate of this chief or others have been found proving that his authority extended in this region. These considerations make us hesitate to accept the theory of Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil that the kings of Conjeeveram were descended from the Pablavas of Rudra-dāman's time, and that the first Pallava king obtained the throne of Kānchi by a marriage alliance with the Nāgas.

Yet another View.-Mr. Rasanavagam who does not agree with the views and conclusions arrived at by the Professor seeks to find the home of Pallavas in the south in the region known as Manipallavam to the early Tamils,1 According to him Killi's son Ilam Tiraiyan through the Naga princess mentioned in the early Tamil work Manimekhalai was really the first Pallava king. In this work he is described as the son of Killi by Pilivalai, a daughter of Valaivanan, the Naga king of Manipallavam. He was lost in a ship-wreck and was found washed ashore with a coil round his ankle of a twig of the Tondai-creeper (Caphallandra Indica). Hence his name Tondaman-Ham-Tiraiyan. Ham-Tiraiyan was therefore the first to become an independent king and progenitor of the Pallava dynasty. His period is fixed as the third quarter of the second century A.D. The dynasty was called the Pallava designated after the mother's native place Manipallavam. The titles, such as Ankura, and Pottaraiyan which were assumed by Pallava kings are synonymous with the word Pallava and remind us of the origin of the name from Manipallavam.

Consideration of the Theory.—According to this theory the Pallavas were of Chōla-Nāga origin and were indigenous to the southern part of the peninsula and Ceylon. They had nothing to do with Western India, Persia, the Chōṭa-Nāgas, Suviśāka and others. But there are certain difficulties in accepting this view as correct. The earliest members of the Pallava family that we know from copper-plate inscriptions do not include either Tondamān-Ilam-Tiraiyan or any member of the Chōla-Nāga dynasty. On the other hand, they describe themselves as members of the Bhāradvāja-gotra and as the performers of Aśvamēdha, Vājapēya and other sacrifices.

³ Ind. Ant., vol. III, pp. 75-80.

Moreover they addressed their charters invariably in Prakrit and Sanskrit, and never in the Tamil language. Such of the charters that contain any allusion to the Naga marriage mention neither a Chola ancestry nor Manipallavam their alleged original home. Their records on the contrary show that they are different from the southern Tamil rulers, and hailed from the north as representatives of Aryan or Sanskrit culture. The hostile relationship of the early Pallavas with the early Tamil rulers, one of the Pallava kings being called the 'submarine-fire to the oceanlike army of the Cholas,' 1 seems to be opposed to this Chola-Naga origin of the Pallava dynasty. For these reasons it looks as if that Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan had no connection with the Pallava family of Kānchipura known to us from charters, and probably was a Tiraiyar-chief 2 who preceded the Pallavas and was a subordinate of the contemporary Choia ruler in the second century A.D.

Other Views .- A more or less similar view is expressed by Mr. M. S. Ramaswami Aiyangar in his recent work Studies in South Indian Jainism.3 According to him the early Pallavas, especially those kings in the fourth century A.D., were called Tiraiyar only and not as Pallavas. In support of this view he mentions the reference a to Vishnugopa in Samudragupta's

1 S.I.I., vol. ii, Part 5, p. 510.

Sludies in South Indian Jainism, p. 143.

^{*} He is actually described as given the name of Tiralyan because he was brought over by the waves of the sea. This seems but a learned attempt at explaining an obscure folk-name Tiralyar. - Ed.

The Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta merely speaks of Vishnugopa as the ruler of Kanchi. The name Pallava does not occur there. From this it is evident that in the fourth century a.D. the word Pallava was little used by them. . . . In Saugam literature the rulers of Kanchi are spoken of as Tiraiyan and Tondalman. . . . Vishnugopa, who was ruling Kanchi at the time of Samudragupta's invasion must therefore be a Tiraiyan.

[&]quot;The Tondamandalapattayam gives an account of the various branches of the Tiraiyar. This has been noted by Kanakasabhai Pillai in his book, Tamils 1800 Years Ago. As one of the main branches of Tiraiyar we have Pullava Tiraiyar showing thereby the connection between Pallavar with Tiralyar. It is therefore natural to suppose that the Pallavas were known to the early Sangam literature by their group · name of Tiraiyar but as their power and influence increased in the land Allahabad pillar inscription as king of Kānchī only (Kanchēyaka Vishnugāba) and not as the king of the Pallavas.

This explains according to him that in the fourth century A.D. the word Pallava was little used by them. Another ingenious suggestion made on similar lines is that of Mr. Swaminatha Aiyar, based upon the apparent similarity of the words Tiraiya, Draya and Darya in Persian. 'Draya' and 'Darya' according to this writer mean the sea in Persian, and Tiraiyar is apparently a Persian-derived name meaning seamen. He would thus ascribe to the Tiraiyar a Persian or Pahlava origin. As the fact seems to accord with the Persian origin of the Pallavas held by certain scholars it was thought by the author as giving the most satisfactory solution of the question. But as was already stated, the Persian origin of the Pallavas rests on the doubtful philological resemblance of words to which the addition of Tiraiya and Draya are now sought to be added. Apart from the resemblance of the words, is there anything positive which supports the identification of these different people Tiraivar and the Pallavas? The evidence at our disposal on the other hand is wholly against it, and in the existing state of research it is not possible to regard the identification as established. The Pallava kings of the copper-plate charters must therefore be looked upon as different from the Tiraiyar, and the early members of the family such as Śivaskandavarman, Budhavarman, etc., have very little to do with the kings and chiefs known as Tiraiyan and Ilam-Tiraiyan figuring in early Tamil literature. Another consideration which militates strongly their branch name Pallava-Tiraiyar assumed greater importance. Hence the absence of the word Pallava in the fourth and the fifth century literature and the greater frequency with which this name occurs in such works as Nandikkalambakam "

There is no evidence to prove that the Tiraiyar of the early Tamil literature were the same as the Pallavas, and the testimony of Tondamandalapatlayam is invalidated as the work is only a work of comparatively modern times. It is not correct to say that in the fourth century the word Pallava was little used by them. In the copper-plate charters of the fourth century as well as the following centuries they are called only as Pallavas and never as Tiraiyan. If Vishpugopa was a Tiraiyan it is strange that he is not mentioned as such in the Allahabad pillar inscription.

against the identification of the Tiraiyar chiefs and the Pallava kings is the attitude of these kings towards Tamil literature and poets. While we find, that the chiefs of the Tiraiyar like Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan not only encouraged and fostered Tamil poets but are actually reputed to have been poets themselves. We do not find that any of the early Pallavas were similarly devoted to the encouragement of Tamil. Tondaman-llam-Tiraiyan was himself a poet is evident from Puranantiru 185, and verses 94, 96 and 106 of Narrinai. The explanation is that the Pallavas were essentially a northern rather than a Tamilian race, steeped in Aryan or Brahmanic culture which through their encouragement took the leading place in the Tamil country. They were aliens to the Tamil land in this sense that their culture and outlook were totally different from those of the Tamils, and hence did not give themselves to actively patronizing Tamil literature like the Tamil kings of the south. Throughout their history we find them almost exclusively encouraging Sanskrit culture and literature. With the exception of the Alvars and Adiyars and the author of Nandikkalambakam, no Tamil poet appears to have enjoyed the patronage of the Pallavas. On the other hand, Sanskrit was actively fostered at the Pallava court, and a number of Sanskrit poets found hospitable reception in the Pallava court such as Bharavi, Dandin, etc., and some of the kings themselves were noteworthy writers in Sanskrit.1 When all these considerations are taken into account it becomes difficult to sustain the identity of the Tiraiyar chiefs with the Pallava kings.

Kurumba-Pallava identification.—Certain writers are inclined to consider that the Pallavas were the same as the people described as Kurumbar figuring in some of the accounts of the Mackenzie manuscripts. As regards these people there is a great deal of vague and misleading ideas in the minds of most writers. Who are the Kurumbas? According to one of the Tamil Nigantus1 certain hill chiefs known as Kurunilamannar were known as the Kurumbas. But in the Mackenzie accounts these people are described as the earliest inhabitants of Tondamandalam and said to have been given the name for their cruel ways. They are also in some of the accounts believed to have been responsible for the division of the region into twenty-four kottams, most of which figure in Pallava and Chola inscriptions. 'The story of the conquest of the region by Ādondaichōla, which will be described later on, is believed by Sir Walter Elliot, Sewell and others to have been accomplished in the eleventh century in the days of Kulottunga Chola, a supposition for which there is no evidence. It is believed by some that these Kurumbas were the same as the Pallavas. But there seems to be absolutely nothing which supports such a notion. There is no reference in the numerous inscriptions of the Tamil land that there was at any time a dynasty of the Kurumbas, or that the Pallava kings are identical with the Kurumbas. Hence it appears to be preposterous to accept the identification.

It has to be noted in this context that Kanchi was famous as a centre of Sanskrit learning and was noted as 'a Ghalika of the Brahmans' in the Velürpalayam Plates. It was a notable centre of Sanskrit learning when the Kadambas were coming into the view of history as in the story of Mayura Sarman.—Ed.

Still another View.—According to Alexander Rea the references making the Pallavas 'hold the sprout' are pedantic Pandit's puns, or a play upon the double meaning of the word 'Pallava'. 'I would suggest,' he says, 'that it might be derived by somewhat free translation from the two Tamil words Pal and Avil (to pull)? referring to their being agriculturists or milk-drawers like the Gopalas of the northern Dekkan.'2 He also throws out another suggestion: 'the masculine singular termination in Tamil is avan, and the planal avar; now prefixing the word Pal (milk), would give Plavan; or Pālavar as the honorific plural. Pālavan in that case would mean milkman.' Both these suggestions, however appremore fanciful than possible as the derivations have no even grammatical justification in their favour.

¹ Disakaram...

In the present state of research definite conclusions on the question seem unattainable. It is, however, quite plain that the theory of foreign origin of the Pallavas, especially that which gives them a Parthian or Persian home, is without foundation. The theory that contents itself with connecting the Pahlava minister with the Pallavas of Kanchi although having an air of plausibility is hardly acceptable as no evidence is forthcoming of the eastward migration of the Pahlavas in the second century. The next alternative is to regard them as indigenous to the country. In doing so we have to establish first whether the Pallavas should be regarded as a family or a tribe. Those who contend that the modern Kallar and the Pallis are descended from the Pallavas are labouring under the impression that the Pallavas constituted a big tribe; there seems to be little evidence for the assumption. In the Pallava inscriptions themselves we scarcely come across with the word Kurumba as a dynastic surname of any of the Pallava kings. It is therefore improbable that the identification of the Kurumbas with the Pallavas postulated by certain scholars rests on sound foundation.

That the rule of the Pallavas of Kanchi was preceded by that of the Cholas is made clear not only by the evidence of Tamil literature, but also from the testimony of the Mackenzie manuscript accounts to which reference had been made already. These accounts although belonging to the early part of the nineteenth century, being the traditional account furnished by the village elders in the days of Col. Colin Mackenzie, profess to relate the early history of the region known as Tondamandalam which corresponded to the region rules over by the Pallava kings. 'According to the Ancient History of Tondamandalam, one of the accounts in the Mackenzie collection, the region was occupied by the Kurumbas was are said to have been responsible for the erection of the twenty-our forts, and the division of the region into twentyfour distries. These are also said to have carried on a seatrade with the merchants of Kaveripattinam. It is from these Kurumbas that one Adondachakravarti, said to be an illegitimate son of the contemporary-Chola king, is described as having conquered the region and acquired it for the Cholas setting up his own rule at Kanchi after uprooting the Kurumbas. The region which was till then known as Kurumbabhūmi is said to have been renamed Tondamandalam after the name of the conquering Chola prince. If we properly interpret the traditional account in the light of the facts regarding the occupation of the region around Kanchipuram by Ilam-Tiraiyan, it is easy to understand that in this account we find preserved the earliest reminiscence of the conquest of the region around Conjeevaram by the Cholas, When did this happen? Early scholars who noticed the account have been misled into thinking that this conquest was made in the eleventh century.1 They have been led to think so by the reference that the contemporary Chola king in these accounts was Kulöttunga, and there was a Kulöttunga ruling in the eleventh century. But all the other details in the account are against this date. The conditions of the territory and the state of civilization at the time of Adondaichola, the first Chola representative, are too primitive to apply to a period like the eleventh century by which time the region had become fully civilized under the Pallavas who are known to have beautified Tondamandalam, and whose sway over the region had already lasted for eight centuries. It looks therefore probable that the traditional account has mistaken the actual name of the contemporary Chola king at the time of the subjugation of the Kurumbas which must have been made by some member of the family of the early Chola Karikala in the second century A.D.

Pre-Pallava History of Kancht.—Kanchi which is one of the seven great holy cities of India is believed to have had history much anterior to the beginning of the Christian era. From the Chinese pilgrim Hiuen Tsang we learn the in the days of Buddha in the fifth century a.c. he frequented the region around Kanchipuram and made conversions. From its same source we learn also that Asokarāja built several stupas none of which has survived to the present day. It would be remembered that Dharmapāla, the celebrated Buddhist savant and scholar at Nalanda, hailed from Kānchīpuram. Whether Buddhism made any progress at Kānchī at the time of Buddha is doubtful as there is not much evidence that Buddhism had advanced into the heart of the Tamil land in this period. Whether Asoka ordered stupas to be built at the city of Kānchīpura or not, it is not possible to say. The presumption that he might have done so gains strength in view of the discovery of Asoka's inscriptions as far south as Siddāpura in the region of Mysore, and from the fact that his inscriptions mention the Chōlas, the Pāndyas and the Kēralaputras. At any rate Hiuen Tsang says that he noticed a stupa about 100 feet high built by Asokarāja.

During the reign of Karikāla who has been assigned, with acceptable authority by several scholars to the age of the Tamil Sangam in the beginning of the Christian era. Kanchipuram appears to have been one of the northern outposts of the kingdom. At any rate it is probable that one of Karikāla's exploits, or those of his generals, must have been the transfer of power from the Andhra-Satavahanas. whose ascendency in this region is indicated by the discovery of ship-coins in profusion in the region between the Pennar and Palar into the hands of the Cholas. At any rate in the period immediately following the city of Kāñchī is found in the possession of Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan as stated in the Perumbanaryuppadai of Rudran Kannanar. According to the Mackenzie MSS, one of the achievements of Adondachola, by whom probably we are to understand Tondaman-llam-Ticaivan, is the uprooting of the the Kurumbas by which term the baruly chiefs of the region were probably known. Under the rule of Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan of Kanchi, presumably as the Chola viceroy, the city appears to have been in a flourishing condition. The Perumbanary uppadai of Rudran Kannanar, the contemporary of Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan gives some idea of the city as it was in those days :- ' In the heart of the town were the Brahman quarters, where neither dog nor the fowl could be seen. They were flanked on the one side by the fishermen's streets, and on the other by those of the traders, and these were surrounded by the Cheris of the Mallas and the toddy-drawers. Then far removed from them were situated at one extremity of the city the pallis of the Idaiyans, and beyond these lay the isolated paraicheris of the Eyinas. Next to the Malla streets were the temple of Tiruvehka and the palace of King Ilam-Tiraiyan.' 1

¹ Beal, Rec. II, p. 230.

The history of Kanchipuram is lost in obscurity almost from the days of Karikāla to its occupation by the Pallava kings under Sivaskandavarman. It is probable that during this period it was in the hands of the Chola princes some of whom are mentioned in the Manimekhalai to have built Buddhist temples.2 It is here mentioned that there were Buddhist chaityas in Kānchi constructed by Kalarkilli and Ilam-Killi whose actual position in the Chola family of this period is not known. It would be an interesting study to examine the evidence contained in the Tamil works regarding the connection of the early Chola princes with Kanchipuram. There are several members of the Chola family bearing thename of Killi mentioned in early Tamil literature. One of these is Kulamurrattu-tunjina Killivalavan, Killi who died at Kulamurram, of whom many poets have sung. Then again Kovūr-Kilār mentjons in Puram 44 and 45 a certain Kārivarrutunjina (who fell or died at Kāri River) Nedumkilli of Uraiyur and of his triend Ham-Tattan. Elsewhere we find the poet singing of Kurāpalli-tunjina (who died at Kurāpalli) Killivalavan,3 one of whose exploits was the destruction of Karuvür. His Pandyan contemporary was apparently the Ugrapperuvaludi who died at Vellivambalam. Other pieces

Tam. Stud., p. 76.
 See chap. 28. Account of Manimekhalai's visit to Kañchi. ³ Puram 373.

in the same collection speak of Solan Ilavandigaippalli-tunjina Nalangilli Šētchenni, Ēnādi (General) Tirukkilli, etc.

According to the account of Manimekhalai, the Chōla King Velvērkilli, who is probably one of the Killis enumerated above, married a Nāga princess called Pīlivaļai, the daughter of Valai-Vaṇan, and became the father of the prince known afterwards as Tondamān-Ilam-Tiraiyan whom certain scholars look upon as the ancestor of the Pallavas of Kānchī. This account although it seems to set up a connection between the Chōlas and the Pallavas has not been corroborated by the evidence of the Pallava charters.

Sengannan.—Among the successors of the Chōla king Karikāla, one of the most important was Ko-Śengannan who is mentioned not only in the early, Tamil classics¹ but also in the Tēvaram hymns of the Śaiva saints Appar and Sambandar.³

We learn from Tamil literature that he defeated his Chera enemy at a place called Kalumalam, took his enemy prisoner and confined him at a place called Kudavāyil-kottam variously identified with Kodavāśal and places in the Cochin State. Sengannan's sway must have extended throughout Tondamandalam. The Kalavali-Narpadu, a poem celebrating the powers of this king as a warrior, gives a picturesque account of the battle of Kalumalam and early Tamil modes of warfare. The age of Sengannan may be ascertained if we know the correct date of Povgaiyar who was his contemporary. According to certain scholars Poygaiyar is identical with Poygai-Alvar the Vaishnava saint whose age is that of the third Sangam or somewhere near it. According to others Poygaiyar is assignable to the sixth or the seventh centuries A.D. This latter date is impossible if we bear in mind that Sengannan is mentioned already in the seventh century A.D.

Stanza from ' Kalavali.'

பெல்லி மென்னுஞ்சிலான் நூல முழுவனபோல் எல்லுக் சுகிற சிவஞ்சேக்ற பக்கேற் பிற்கு முறந்து போர்த்தரினர் செல்லப், சின்வங் கிணவர் பெற்ற வரத்து—

Appar, Tev. Tirukurukkai Palikam; Sambandar, Tiruvānaikkāval Palikam.

by Appar as a well-known Śaiva saint. He is said to have worshipped at Tirunaraiyūr near Kumbhakonam by Tirumangai Āļvār, the Vaishnava saint who also notes that he built as many as seventy temples dedicated to Śiva. If Ko-Śengannan could become so popular as early as the seventh century to be mentioned by the Śaiva saints of the period in their hymns a considerable time must have elapsed between his period and the period of the Śaiva saints. It would not be wrong to assign him to the period succeeding the age of Karikäia (third century A.D.) and immediately preceding the advent of the Pallavas of Kanchīpuram.

CHAPTER III

EARLY PALLAVAS OF THE PRAKRIT RECORDS

THE materials for the reconstruction of the early history of the Pallavas are far from adequate. We are entirely dependent upon the few copper-plate charters in Prakrit and Sanskrit for our knowledge of the political history of the Pallava kings of Conjeevaram until about the seventh century when we are on more certain ground. As more than one scholar has remarked the copper plate charters of the early period are more useful for constructing a genealogical list than for writing the political history of the period. The facts contained in the records enumerate the names of the greatgrandfather, the grandfather and the father of the donor of the grant and the details of the object of the grant. They do not furnish many particulars on the political condition of the period. It is too much to expect much information concerning the period from these charters as their professed object was merely to record donations to certain individuals. As we have already pointed out, it is only from the seventh century that the habit of recording the exploits of the ancestors of the king who made the grant came to be popular in South India.

The Pallava inscriptions and copper charters are divisible as already indicated into three sections. To the first group belongs the Prakrit charters which though bearing no date in any known era have been on palæographical grounds assigned to the third and the fourth centuries of the Christian era. It is well known from the history of the Āndhras that they continued to be powerful in the southern region almost till the first quarter of the third century A.D. We know from the Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta that about the middle of the fourth century A.D. there reigned in the region extending to the banks of the Krishna, a Pallava king named Vishnugopa. The contemporaneity of Samudragupta with Vishnugopa of Kanchi, who was undoubtedly one of the early kings of the Pallava dynasty of Conjeevaram, leads to the conclusion that Vishnugopa must have reigned some time about A.D. 340 to 350. But a recent attempt has been made to fix the initial date of the Gupta era at A.D. 200-201 which would put back Samudragupta's period to the middle of the third instead of the fourth century. But this theory rests at present on Jain tradition merely and has serious objections against it. If this date be accepted, Vishnugopa of Kanchi would have to be placed in the middle of the third century, the period of the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters, and this would necessitate the putting back of the kings of the Prakrit charters to the second century-a position which would be difficult to accept in the present scheme of Andhra chronology. Without taking up this matter we may proceed to put together the order of succession for the earliest period, which may be styled the age of the kings, of the Prakrit charters, circa A.D. 200-350. The three important Prakrit charters which are the earliest of the Pallava charters-the Mayidavolu plates, the Hirahadagalli plates and the British Museum plates have been published in the Epigraphia Indica with text, translation and valuable notes by Bühler, Hultzsch, Leumann and others.

The actual order of succession of the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters is uncertain, but the following represents the most probable one so far as we could make out from the Prakrit copper-plates that are available:—

Bappa Dēva
|
Sivaskandavarman
|
Buddhy (ankura)
|
Vīravarman
|
Vishņugopa (A.D. 340).

The earliest of the Prakrit charters that we have is dated from the capital city of Kānchīpuram issued by Śivaskandavarman while he was yet a crown-prince and dated in the tenth year of his father.1 Sivaskandavarman is described as a Yuvamahārāja and affiliated to the Bhāradvāja-gotra of the Pallava family. The grant is addressed to the Viceroy at Dhanyakata (Dharanikotta near Amarayati) in the Andhrapatha. It is thus plain that the kingdom of Sivaskandavarman's father, who is called Bappa Deva merely, included Andhrapathā and Tondamandalam. The capital of Andhrapathā the Telugu region, appears to have been Dhanyakataka, while Conjeevaram was the Imperial as well as the local capital of Tondamandalam, their Tamil dominion. The next in point of time is the grant recorded in the Hirahadagalli plates found in Hirahadagalli in the Bellary District. The king who issued this grant is regarded by all scholars as the same as the Prince who issued the Mavidavolu grant. This is also issued from the city of Kanchipuram, and is dated in the eighth year of the king and refers to a grant of the village of Chillerekakodumka in the Sătāhaniratta probably identical with the Satahani-Ahara of the Myakadoni record a dated in the eighth year of king Pulumavi. The plates, besides recording the details connected with the gift, mention the fact that Sivaskandavarman performed the Aśvamedha, Agnishtoma and Vaiapeva sacrifices. Of these, if there is any truth in the claim of the first we may reasonably presume that Sivaskandavarman made extensive conquests and that he had some subordinate kings under his rule. There is no means by which we could at present check the accuracy or otherwise of this claim.

Next in order of time comes the Gunapadeya or the British Museum plates of Charudevi.3 This record gives in genealogical order the names of Vijayaskandavarman, his son Yuvamahārāja Buddhavaraman and his son Buddhyankura. This record is dated in some unknown year of Vijayaskandavarman's reign and records an order of the Queen of the heir-apparent consisting of the gift of land to the temple of Nārāyaṇa at Dālūra. At present it is difficult to say what relation the Vijayaskandavarman of this record bore to Sivaskandavarman of the first two Praktit charters. It has been attempted by certain scholars to identify the Sivaskandavarman of the Prakrit charters with the Vijayaskandavarman of the British Museum record as the prefixes Vijaya or Siva are too insignificant to matter much. But as this relationship is not given in any of the numerous genealogical lists of later times we cannot be sure whether the members of the Prakrit charters and the members of the Sanskrit charters were connected with one another in this manner. One striking fact which is a decisive consideration in this identification is the close similarity of the palæography of the Hirahadagalli and the British Museum copper-plates. As regards the period of these kings we have alredy indicated that it is the age which followed the decadence of the Andhra power, that is, the period from about the middle of the third century to the middle of the fourth century. If we calculate back from the known date of Vishnugopa the contemporary of Samudragupta, allowing about 25 years for each generation we arrive at A.D. 215 for the reign of Bappa the earliest known Pallava sovereign of Kānchi. This calculation is only approximate as it is unlikely that the reign-period of all the kings was the same and is based upon the supposed contemporaneity of Samudragupta and Vishnugopa, and the probability that Vishnugopa of the Samudragupta pillar inscription was a Pallava king.

Ep. Ind., vol. vi, p. 84ff. and plates.
 Ibid., vol. xiv, p. 153.
 Ibid., vol. viii, p. 143.

The History of the Period.—As we have already pointed out it is not apparent who was the first member of the Pallavas who established the Pallava power in Conjeevaram. So far as we know Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan and Bappaare the earliest known names associated with the rule of the ancient city of Conjeevaram. The relation of the former with the latter is not known although certain scholars have advocated the view that he was the first member of the Pallava family. The entire absence of his name, and the name Tiraiyan itself or its equivalent in the Prakrit and Sanskrit records of the Pallavas lead us to reject this view. Our knowledge of this ruler is derived from Tamil literature and from tradition embodied in the Mackenzie MSS. The state of the city of Kanchipuram during the reign of this ruler is fully described in the early Tamil work, the Perumbanarrupadai, by the Sangam poet Rudran-Kappanar. How the region passed from the hands of Ilam-Tiraiyan into the hands of the Pallavas remains unknown. It is presumable that about the middle of the first quarter of the third century A.D. there was an invasion of the region from the north led by the Andhra-Satavahana rulers or generals in the wake of which the first member of the Pallava family must have acquired sovereignty over the region. A faint recollection of this invasion is recorded in the Mackenzie MSS, accounts concerning Tondaman Chakravarti and Visvāvasurāja. Whether this was brought about by an immediate ancestor of Bappa or Bappa himself is not known. We may roughly fix the period of the passing of Tondamandalam from the Chola feudatories into the hands of the Pallavas about the closing years of the third century A.D.

Maharaja Bappa.-It is not clear whether the immediate ancestor of Śivaskandavarman of the Prakrit charters, who is called Bappa in the record found at Mayidavolu, was the actual founder of the rule of the Pallavas at Kanchipuram. In all probability he was not. Because, if this had been so we may reasonably expect the mention of such an achievement in the record issued by his son and heir-apparent, and dated in his own reign. The kingdom over which Bappa ruled included in addition to the districts around Kanchipuram known as Tondamandalam or Tundākarāshtra, the Telugu country on both banks of the Krishna which had Dharanikota or Dhanyakataka for its capital. It may be presumed that during this age the Pallava kingdom was divided into two parts, the northern part comprising the Telugu districts with Amaravati as capital, and the Tamil districts around Kanchi with Kanchipuram for its capital. Thus the region bounded by the Palar on the south and the Krishna on the north formed the kingdom of the Pallavas during this period. The close resemblance of the Mayidavolu plates with the Kondamudi plates of Jayavarman which again resembles the Karle inscription of Gautamiputra Sätakarni and the Nasik inscription of Vasishtiputra-Pulumāvi, fixes the period of Bappa and Sivaskandavarman approximately as the early part of the third century A.D. 1—Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil supposed, in his Pallavas, that Yuvamahārāja Sivaskandavarman of the Mayidavolu record was the grandson of the Āndhra king Sivaskandavarman. 2 But as he himself admits, this is based entirely on similarity of names such as those of Yuvamahārāja Sivaskandavarman and Sivaskanda Sātakarni. 3 Apart from this there is no positive evidence to prove that the Pallavas were directly connected with the ruling Satavāhana royal family or descended from them.

Bappa is said to have given away as free gift numerous gold coins as well as a hundred thousand ox-ploughs to increase the prosperity of the Pallava family. This was presumably intended to bring under cultivation vast areas of uncultivated forest tracts in the Telugu country.

Sivaskandavarman .- The Mayidavolu grant was issued while this sovereign was yet the heir-apparent. From the Hirahadagalli grant dated in the 8th year of his reign we learn that he had the title of Dharmamahārāja. . This was evidently assumed after extensive conquests. We do not know with any definiteness what were the regions which he brought under the sway of Pallava rule. But from the fact that this record says that Sivaskandavarman was a performer of the Asvamedha, Vajapēya and Agnishtoma we may reasonably infer that his suzerainty must have been recognized by several kings. Otherwise the performance of Asvamedha would lose any significance attaching to it unless it is regarded as a false boast. It is not apparent which was the southernmost limit of the Tamil part of his kingdom, but it is presumable that his sway extended as far as the South Pennar while in the north his kingdom included the Telugu districts between the Godavari and Krishna. His capital was Kānchipuram while Amarāvati in the north appears to have continued as a flourishing seat of the Buddhists and their monasteries. The records of Sivaskandavarman give us a glimpse into the Asokan nature of the organization of government during this period. The kingdom was divided into divisions known as Vishaya, Rattha and Grama. The officers entrusted to rule these areas were known as Vishayikas, Ratthika (Rashtrikas), and Desädikata (Dēsadhikrtas). These officers were chiefly recruited from the members of the royal family and the commanders of armies. The persons who were consulted by the king on administrative matters were the prime-minister and the private secretary (Amatya and the Rahasyatikata). It is significant that the names of the various heads of departments are all in Prakrit. It is probable that the Pallava kings continued the administrative system of Asoka on the lines of the Dharmasastras and Arthasastras. The taxes collected by these kings from their subjects are in accordance with the Sanskrit Dharmasastra rules. The taxes and other dues that these kings were entitled to are known as the eighteen kinds of taxes (Attārasajāti-Parihāra). Some of these included the taking of milk and curd from the subjects, the supply of cattle to the officers touring in the villages on royal duty, the supplying of lodging facilities and utensils, fire-wood, vegetables, flowers, menial servants, etc. A complete list of these is furnished in the later charters enumerating the exemptions secured by certain donees to whom free gifts of land were made.1 During this period the manufacture of salt and jaggery were royal monopolies, and special license had to be obtained for private manufacture.

¹ Ep. Ind., vol. vi, p. 315. * Pallavas, pp. 8, 9. * Ibid., p. 9.

Inland and foreign commerce must have been in a flourishing condition during this period if we may judge from the writings of the classical writers which mention several seaport towns such as Kamara, Poduka, Sopatma, Melanga, Kodura, etc. Of these Kodura has been identified with Kudur and Melangus was obviously Malanka or Mavilangai probably ³ Compare the Käšakkudi and the Vēļūrpāļayam plates. S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 346ff. and 507, Mahābalipuram or Seven Pagodas.¹ Sea-borne trade must have been flourishing at these various ports, and the presence of large numbers of ship-coins and Roman coins of an early period fully lend support to this view. So far as the port of Mahābalipuram is concerned it is clear, from the evidence of Tirumangai-Ālvār, that in the early part of the eighth century the place was a busy harbour. This probably was the case in the days of Śivaskandavaraman also. The ship-coins discovered extensively between Cuddalore and Madras have been attributed by some to Pallava kings although it looks probable that they were issued under the auspices of the Śātavāhana kings of the Dakhan.

Vijayaskandavarman, circa A.D. 280 .- The order of succession of the Prakrit plates is not known. But we may presume from palæographical indications that Vijayaskandavarman of the British Museum copper-plates succeeded Šivaskandavarman in the interval between A.D. 275 and 340. All that we know about this sovereign and his times is the information given in this record.2 From this we learn that his queen was called Charudevi, and that the heir-apparent to the throne was called Buddhyankura, and that the father of Vijaya-Buddhavarman was called Vijayaskandavarman who is presumably identical with Sivaskandavarman of the earlier charters. The record registers a grant of land to the temple of Nārāyana at the village of Dalūra in the division called Kūlimaharatha. This is, so far as we know, the earliest Pallava record mentioning a royal gift to the temples. We do not know anything about the political events during the reign of Buddhyankura who flourished in the years immediately following the death of Vijaya-Buddhavarman. The next member of the Pallava family is Vishnugopa well known as the Pallava contemporary of Samudragupta.

The connection of the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters and those of the Sanskrit charters is not clear. According to some scholars the dynasties of the Prakrit charters and the Sanskrit charters are distinctly different, and not directly connected. According to others' all the members of the copper-plates and the stone inscriptions whether they are written in Prakrit, Sanskrit or Tamil are to be connected with one dynasty only the most ancient member of which was Bappa. Future research and the discovery of fresh copper-plate charters or other records alone can solve this question finally.

Ind. Ant., vol. xlvi, p. 72.
 Ep. Ind., vol. vi, p. 88 and vol. viii, p. 143.

Jouveau-Dubreuil, Patlavas, pp. 72-3, Genealogical Table.

CHAPTER IV

EARLY PALLAVAS OF THE SANSKRIT RECORDS

Sources of Information and Their Nature.-We may now proceed to construct the order of succession of the Pallava kings mentioned in the various copper-plate charters inscribed in Sanskrit in their genealogical order. This is the period ranging from about A.D. 350 to 600. The most important copper-plate records of this period are those addressed from Tāmrāpa, Palakkada, Mēnmātūra, Dašanapura, Pikīra, Öngödu (I and II), Darśi, Rāyakota, Chandalūr, Udayendiram, Uruvappalli, and the stone inscriptions of Vayalur and Amaravati. These charters have for their object the recording of gifts of land to learned Brahmans or temples, and only incidentally mention the ancestral history of the ruling sovereign who issued the grant. Like the earlier charters they are not dated in any known era such as the Saka which might enable us to fix their date with precision; but they are merely dated in the regnal year of the ruling sovereign. These records are almost all of them written in the Sanskrit language in the early Grantha-Pallava script peculiar to the Pallava records, and have been assigned on purely palæographical grounds to the fifth and sixth centuries A.D. The practice of inscribing a part of the record in Tamil was adopted only from the seventh century onward, the Kūram plates of Paramesvaravarman being the earliest known Pallava Sanskrit-Tamil charter. To these we may also add the four or five important copper-plate charters of this variety belonging to the seventh, eighth and ninth centuries A.D. which also furnish, in the donative part of the gift, a long genealogy of the earlier sovereigns in the Pallava dynasty. These are the Kaśākkudi, Vēlūrpāļayam, Korrangudi, Tandantottam, and the Udayendiram plates. These records enable us to check the accuracy of the information contained in the earlier grants.

The Nature of these Records and some Important Synchronisms. -The actual chronological position and the genealogical order of the Pallava kings of this period are, in the present state of knowledge, bound to be tentative and far from strictly accurate. Fortunately an element of certainty in the case of certain of the sovereigns of this period has become possible by two or three important synchronisms. The most valuable of these is contained in the Penugonda plates of the Western Ganga king Madhava II, which, unlike most other early Ganga plates, has been accepted to be a genuine record.1 stating that Arivarman (equivalent of Harivarman or Aryavarman) and Simhavarman and Skandavarman were installed on the Ganga throne by Simhavarman and Skandavarman of the Pallava family this record gives the valuable information that Aryavarman and Simhavarman of the Western Ganga dynasty were contemporaries of the Pallava kings Simhavarman and Skandavarman, and in all probability their feudatories as well. Dr. Fleet, who has made a special study of these plates, has given it as his opinion that the period when these kings flourished must have been about the last quarter of the fifth century A.D., and that A.D. 475 is a very good date for the record.

The 'Lokavibhaga' Datum.—The next important work which introduces some certainty in the early Pallava chronology is the Digambara Jain work known as Lokavibhaga which is dated in Saka 380, i.e. a.d. 458.2 This date, we understand from the work, corresponds to the twenty-second year of Simhavarman, the king of Känchi. Dr. Fleet, who was generally suspicious of early Saka dates, examined this date carefully, and making a few corrections, arrived at the conclusion that it was equivalent to a.d. 458. As this year corresponded to the twenty-second year of Simhavarman the initial year of his reign may be calculated back as the year a.d. 436. This datum, which was first brought to the notice of Fleet, J.R.A.S., 1915, pp. 471-85.

 Mys. Archi. Rep. for 1909-10, para 112.

scholars by Mr. R. Narasimhacharyar of the Mysore Archæological Department, helps us to fix the period of two of the Pallava kings Simhavarman and his son Skandavarman in the second and third quarters of the fifth century. Prof.
Jouveau-Dubreuil however underrates the value of this testimony and regards it as rather suspicious especially as it does not say which Simhavarman it was and to what branch of the Pallava family he belonged.

Avantisundarikathāsāra.-Another valuable synchronism which has been discovered recently, is obtained from the Sanskrit manuscript known as Avantisundarikathasara the historical introduction of which gives an account of Bharavi and Dandin. We learn from this that Bharavi visited the courts of Vishpuvardhana, Durvinita, and Simhavishou. From the fact that the poet is described to have visited these three kings we may infer that these kings were contemporaries. As it is known that Durvinita belonged to the later part of the sixth century, and as we also know that Vishnuvardhana is assignable to the same period, we may feel certain that the members of the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters belong to a period anterior to the seventh century. From the seventh century onward there is not much uncertainty either in the actual order of succession of the Pallava kings or their dates. The light thrown by the Avantisundarikatha upon the political history of South India and chronology is discussed both in the Proceedings of the Oriental Conference Second Session (1922) and in the Mythic Society's Journal, by Messrs. M. Ramakrishnakavi and A. Rangaswami Sarasvati.2

We have already pointed out that the connection of the Pallava kings referred to in the Prakrit charters such as

¹ The Pallavas, p. 18,

Another MS. of the original prose Avantisundarikathā by Acharya Dandin has been discovered by Pundit G. Haribara Sastri at Trivandrum. This confirms the contemporaneity of Bhāravi, Vishquevardhana I, Durvinita and Simhavishque It makes however Dandin the great grandson of Damodhara, a friend of Bhāravi, and not Bhāravi himself, the modification being due to a slight error in reading. Summary of papers, Fourth Oriental Conference, pp. 44-7. Ed.

Sivaskandavarman, Vijaya-Buddhavarman, etc., with those of the Sanskrit charters such as Skandavarman, Simhavarman, Simhavishnu, etc., is not definitely known. But the fact that in both the sets of copper-plates the kings are spoken of as belonging to the Bhāradvāja-gotra, and the general resemblance of the names in both lead us to conclude that these kings were members of one family.

Vishnugopa. Circa 340.-The next point concerns Vishnugopa, the contemporary of Samudragupta. A perusal of the genealogical portion of the early Pallava charters shows that there were several members bearing this name such as Yuvamahārāja Vishnugopa, Vishnugopavarman of the Uruvapalli and the Pikīra plates, besides a Mahārāja-Vishņugopa who figures twice in the Chura plates. Then again we have, in the Vayalur pillar inscription, the name of Vishnugopa repeated thrice and also the name of Vishnudasa. The earliest of these is probably to be identified with the adversary described in the Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta. It has been suggested recently that the orthodox estimate of Samudragupta's southern expedition has been considerably exaggerated and that the Allahabad inscription has been misinterpreted. Thus for instance Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Ancient History of Decean2 says :-

'After all these rectifications that we have just made the expedition of Samudragupta presents itself before our eyes in quite another form. It is no more a new Alexander marching victoriously through South India; it was simply the unfortunate attempt of a king from the north who wanted to annex the coast of Orissa but completely failed. About a.D. 340, Samudragupta left his capital Pāṭalīputra and marched directly towards the south. First he conquered Southern Kosala where the king Mahēndra was reigning in the vicinity of Sirpur and Sambalpur. He then crossed the forests that are to the south of Sonpur and found there the small kingdom of Mahākāntāra which means the "great forest" and where Vyāgrarāja the "Tiger-king" was reigning.¹ Then he reached the coast of Orissa. Mantarāja, king of Korala, Mahēndra of Pishtāpura, Svāmidatta of Koṭṭura, a citadel on the top of a hill and Damana of Erāndapalle tried to stop him but were captured. Samudragupta now prepared to make new conquests when he was opposed by a confederacy of all the kings that reigned near the mouth of the rivers Godavari and the Krishna, the most powerful of them being Vishnugopa the Pallava king of Kāñchi. The other kings were Nīlarāja of Avamukta, Hastivarman of Vengi, Ugrasēna of Pālakka, Kubēra who reigned in Dēvarāshṭra and Dhananjaya whose capital was at Kusthalapura. Samudragupta being repulsed by the kings of the Eastern Deccan abandoned the conquests he had made in the coast of Orissa and returned home.'

Thus according to this view the Allahabad pillar does not speak of Pollachi, Palghat, Mahendragiri, Colair lake, Erandol and Maharashtra. The identification of Airandapalla with Erandol appears in the light of the facts known from the Siddhantam plates of Devendravarman to be near Chicacole.2 Similarly Devarashtra which has been hitherto identified with Mahārāshtra, thus misleading scholars into the impression that Samudragunta went to Mahārāshtra, figures in an Eastern Chālukva grant.3 discovered in the Vizagapatam District. All the kingdoms mentioned in the inscription are situated in the east coast of the Dakhan. Again according to the same authority Samudragupta did not advance as far south as Känchi to defeat Vishpugopa, but was effectively subjugated by him on the banks of the Godavari or the Krishna. This is merely a hypothesis which has not been proved; there is no evidence against the orthodox view that Samudragupta did advance against Känchipuram and most scholars are inclined to accept

About the identification of this Vyagra see Ind. Ant., vol. lv, pp. 103ff and 223ff. Ed.

^{*} Ep. Ind., vol. xii, p. 212.

Ep. Rep., 1908-1909, p. 109. These identifications cannot yet be regarded as final. Places in East Khandesh have vestiges which would support Fleet's identification yet. See J. I. H., vol. v, p. 399. A note on Vakātakas by Y. R. Gupte. Ed.

this view. There is nothing to sustain the view that the defeat inflicted upon Vishnugopa and his collegues have been exaggerated as presumed by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Ancient History of the Deccan.\(^1\) The distinction made in the Allahabad pillar inscription in regard to the various groups of states Samudragupta came into contact with, is clear evidence of an actual invasion and conquest in regard to these trans-Vindhyan states.

A doubt has been raised2 whether the Vishnugopa mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription is to be regarded as a member of the Pallava dynasty or otherwise. The Vishnugopa, described as belonging to Kānchi, could be no other than a member of the Pallava dynasty although he is not described as a Pallava affiliated to the Bharadvaja-gotra as the kings of the copper-plate charters are. The consideration which makes the surmise almost certain is that the name is a characteristic Pallava name in the same manner as Nandivarman may be regarded as peculiar to the Pallava dynasty. The name does not occur in any other royal dynasty so far known to us. There is moreover no probability of any other royal dynasty having ruled at Känchipuram just at the period of Samudragupta's raid, other than the Pallava. All these considerations taken along with the fact that the chieftains mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription are associated only with the capital city of their kingdoms and not with their dynastic or family names, lead to the conclusion that Vishnugopa of Kānchi, the adversary of Samudragupta, was a member of the Prakrit or early Sanskrit charters. We are not at present in a position to know anything more about him except his encounter with Samudragupta, and the probability of his being devoted to Vishnu as is apparent by the name. No copperplate, which may be expected to throw light on his reign, has been brought to light vet. But the passage in the Allahabad inscription makes it plain that in the middle of the fourth century A.D., there reigned on the banks of the Godavari 'and the Krishna and in their vicinity a number of powerful chieftains such as Hastivarman of Vengi, presumably identical with the Sālankāyana king of that name. Nīlarāja of Avamukta, Ugrasēna of Palakka and others.

¹ Ch. lii, pp. 58-61.

Vishnugopa to Simhavishnu. A. D. 340 to 550 .- This period covers roughly 200 years and is commonly spoken of as the age of the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters, as the records of this period are invariably in Sanskrit and not in Prakrit as hitherto. The effects of the invasion of Samudragupta on the Pallava dynasty must have been far-reaching. One of these was probably to weaken the authority of Vishnugopa, and, after his death, to promote dynastic quarrels among his successors. It is very difficult to establish the exact order of succession of kings enumerated in the historical portion of the copper-plates of this period. Nor is it possible to say definitely whether all the kings, whose names figure in these records, actually ruled or occupied the Paliava throne. The extent of the territory over which their rule probably extended is also uncertain. We have already pointed out that it is possible to establish some connection, at present unknown, between the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters and those of the Prakrit records. (A. D. 215-350). We do not know who the first member of the Pallava dynasty of the Sanskrit charters was. In this respect the Velurpalayam copper-plate charter ascribed to the later Pallava king Nandivarman III of the ninth century and the Kaśākkudi plates of Nandivarman Pallavamalla throw some light on the manner in which the first member of the Pallava dynasty acquired sovereignty.1

The bistorical portion of the Vēlūrpāļayam grant which supplies a detailed genealogy of the Pallava kings after giving the legendary origin of the Pallavas from Vishnu to Pallava, through Brahma, Angīrasa, Brahaspati, Šamyu, Bhāradvāja, Drōna, Ašvatthāman, etc., proceeds to enumerate certain quasi-historical names such as those of Ašokavarman, Kalabhartr Vēlūrpāļayam plates, S. J. J., vol. ii, p. 507.

and Chuta-Pallava. The break after the king Asokavarman indicated in the record (verse 5)1 suggests that the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters-Sivaskandavarman, Vijayaskandavarman, Buddhavarman have to be included here. The omission of these names is probably attributable to the fact that the writer of the document had only a foggy notion of the kings of the early period, living as he did several generations after these kings, when their memory had almost faded away. The historicity of Kalabhartr, Chuta-Pallava and Virakurcha is confirmed by the mention of these names in the Väyalür pillar inscription of Rājasimha apparently in the order of succession. This latter contains many repetitions and should be used with much care. For example, although it is one of the earliest known list of Pallava kings and belongs to the seventh century, it is impossible to regard that all the kings mentioned in it were ruling kings. On the other hand it appears to have been a list made up in the reign of Rūjasimha by a writer, who was obviously labouring under the difficulty of accommodating a number of real and quasi-real kings that tradition and copper-plates had preserved, and who, in doing so, was unable to allow for similarity of names. Being in these difficulties he put together all the names he got at, in an order of his own. This seems to be the only explanation for the repetitions that one notices in the list on the Vayalur pillar when compared with other genealogies. Prof. G. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Pallavas2 expresses the opinion that the Vāyalūr inscription gives a complete list of the Pallava kings in the order of their succession. In the portion earlier than Mahendravarman I, the Väyalür record includes names like Vimala, Konkanika, which occur exclusively in Western Ganga lists of kings. Vishnugopa is mentioned three times, Kumāravishņu twice, which is just possible. However Skandavarman is mentioned five times and Simhavarman four times which appears less probable. But the record is doubtless of great value to us as establishing a connection between the members of the Prakrit, Sanskrit, and Simhavishnu dynasties which have been hitherto looked upon as different dynasties. As we have seen it is impossible to agree with those who hold that the Väyalür list 1 gives a complete list of forty-two names of the Pallava kings in their order of succession.

² S. I. I., vol. ii, part 5, p. 508. * p. 18 ff.

The Vayalar Pillar Genealogy

Brahma Skandavarman Angirasa Simhayarman Brahaspati Viravarman Śamyu Skandavarman Bhāradvāja Simhayarman Drona Skandavarman Aśvatthāman Nandivarman I Pallava Simhavarman Aśoka Simhayarman Harigupta Vishnugopa Āryavarman Simhayarman Vimala Simhavishnu Mahendrayarman I Konkanika Kālabhartr Narasimhayarman I Mahendravarman II Chūta-pallava Virakūreha Paramēsvaravarman I Chandrayarman Karāla Vishnugopa Skandamüla Kumāravishnu Buddhavarman Rājasimha Skandavarman

Vishnudāsa
A careful study of the Vēlūrpāļayam plates shows that the members represented in this record from Kālabhartr, who is called Kāṇagopa in the Kāśakudi plates, belonged to what we have called the period of Sanskrit charters. As it is clear from this record the members mentioned in verses 5 to 8 as Ašokavarman and others in whose family Kālabhartr is said to have been born, included the members of the Prakrit charters such as Bappa, Śivaskandavarman, etc. We cannot rely very strictly upon the order of succession in this record as there are several breaks and gaps in it. We may therefore proceed to make one or two observations regarding the kings of this period.

Vishnugopa

¹ Cf. list of fifty-four names given in Ep. Ind., vol. aviii, p. 151 and the whole epigraph as edited in pp. 145-152, ibid.—ED.

Virakūrcha and His Period .- Of Kalabhartr and Chūta-pallava very little is known excepting their names. Of these the first appears to have been the first member of the Sanskrit dynasty. Of Vīrakūrcha, however, the grandson of Kālabhartr, we learn from the Vēlūrpāļayam plates (verse 6) that 'simultaneously with the hand of the daughter of the chief of serpents he also grasped the complete insignia of royalty and became famous.' This means in plain language that Virakurchavarman became king on marrying the daughter of a Naga chief. As to the actual period of this marriage there is some amount of disagreement among scholars. The marriage of Vīrakūrcha which, according to the Vēlūrpālayam plates, gave him a kingdom, according to certain authors, has reference to the first member of the dynasty of the Sanskrit Pallavas. According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil the Naga marriage of Virakurcha has reference to the first king of the Prakrit charters Sivaskandavarman's father.1 Verse 6 of these plates therefore has reference clearly to the first member of the Pallava dynasty Virakürcha.

Was Vtrakarcha the First Pallava king?—This conclusion of Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil does not appear to be quite correct. In the first place it is possible that the names of Asokavarman, etc., as we have already pointed out, and others referred to in verse 5 of the Vēlürpālayam record, stand for the names of the members of the Prakrit dynasty. If so, it is difficult to accept the view that Virakurcha was the first Pallava king. In the second place it is possible that Viravarman's immediate ancestor, presumably his father or grandfather, might have lost hold of the sovereignty of the Pallava kingdom owing to some unknown cause, one of which might have been the invasion of Samudragupta. If this were so, his date would have to be sought somewhere after Vishnugopa. Again, in the Vēlūrpālavam plates it is not stated that Virakurcha who married the Naga princess, was the first member in the family of the Pallavas or the first to acquire a kingdom and a kingly position in that family. This view is also in agreement with that of Dr. S. K. Aiyangar 1 who in his account of the Pallavas ascribes the marriage of Virakūrcha to the period immediately following the invasion of Samudragupta into the south and the consequent disruption. According to his interpretation, 'Put in plain language this (the Naga marriage) would mean that he married a Naga princess and thereby acquired the title of sovereignty of the region over which he ruled. This obviously has no connection with the birth of Tondaman-Ilam-Tiraiyan, who, according to tradition embodied in the classical poem Perumbanarrupadai, was the son of a Chola king through a Naga princess Neither the detail of the marriage nor the acquisition will agree with the story of Ilam-Tiriayan. . . . '

What were the circumstances, political and otherwise, which brought about the matrimonial alliance of Virakūrcha, a member of the Pallava family with the daughter of a Nāga king which gave him virtually a wife and a kingdom? To this question no definite answer is possible in the present state of our knowledge relating to the political condition of the Dakhan in the fourth century A.D. Dr. S. K. Aiyangar has however attempted to solve the problem. In the course of his valuable contribution on the Pallavas he identifies² the Nāga family with which Vīrakūrcha became connected with the family of Skandanāga, the Šātavāhana viceroy of the region round Adoni and who probably belonged to a clan of the family of Šātavāhanas other than that which ruled in the Dakhan but connected by blood, and perhaps even by alliance, with that clan. 'At one time under the rule of the later Śātavāhanas these Nāgas appear to have extended their territory and even acquired a considerable portion of the kingdom of the Śātavāhanas themselves. If the Pallava chieftain in the neighbourhood made himself sufficiently distinguished, a marriage alliance with these Nāgas, from whom came the early Śātavāhana queen Nāganika, would have been possible for him. The hint, vague as it is, in the inscription seems to let us into the secret of the rise of the dynasty of the Pallavas to power.'

Origin and Early History of the Pallavas, p. 43. 2 lbid., p. 44,

As regards the probable period when this happened, he indicates that this must have happened at a time when the Śātavāhanas as a ruling dynasty had passed away, and the attempt at the assertion of the Gupta power over this region under Samudragupta had in a way shaken the authority of the older dynasties to allow of a new dynasty to spring into prominence. The character of the invasion of Samudragupta itself makes it clear that the whole of the western portion or the empire of Andhras was in the hands of a power whom for some good reason Samudragupta did not attack. One such reason might have been that they held possession of the territory with some power, such as the Vākātakas in Berar and Central India. It is likely that their authority was not readily acquiesced in by the smaller chieftains, feudatories of the Satavahanas, along the east coast. If this surmise should turn out correct it is possible to conceive that the southwestern portion was held by a powerful family of the Nagas, relatives of the Satavahanas, and the Pallavas were among the feudatories who showed a ready inclination to throw off the Satavahana yoke. When Samudragupta had come and gone, the western power, whatever that was, might have entered into a marriage alliance with the Pallavas and recognized them in the position to which they had already risen by their own efforts.

Skandasishya (Skandavarman).—From the Vēlūrpālayam plates again (verse 7) we learn that the son of Vīrakūrcha, who is probably identical with Virakurchavarman of the Darsi copper plate fragment, was Skandasishya. He is described in this record as the 'moon in the sky of this family' and is said to have seized the ghatika of the twice-born from King Satyasena. This achievement of his enables us to fix his period more or less definitely, although the identity of Satyasena has not been completely worked out. The reference to a ghatika at this early period is interesting. There is also a reference, in the Talagunda inscription of Kakutsthavarman, ascribed to the first half of the sixth century, to Kanchi being called a ghatika. But no one has attempted to identify the King Satyasena mentioned in the Velurpalayam In his introductions to these plates published in the South Indian Inscriptions, Mr. H. Krishna Sastri says that he remains unidentified.1 Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar suggests the possibility that the Satyasena here referred to may be Mahäkshatrapa Svāmi Satyasēna of the coins whose time would be the ninth decade of the fourth century A.D." It is uncertain whether the power of the Kshatrapas extended sufficiently southward so as to make them come into hostile contact with the Pallava kings. The probability is that the Pallavas co-operated with the dynasty of Western Dakhan, the Vākāţakas, in inflicting a defeat on the Kshatrapas and this interpretation of the situation, therefore, seems to be in accordance with the general trend of Vākātaka history as this is the period to which the conquest of Kuntala by the Vākātaka-Prithvīsēna I is ascribable. 'Such an advance.' as has been pointed out, 'is possible only by the overthrow of the Kshatrapas, and other successors of the Andhras in this region.'

The Probable Period of Skandasishya (Skandavarman).—This identification of Satyasēna with Svāmi Satyasimba, father of Mahākshatrapa, Svāmi Rudrasimba III, whose date according to Prof. Rapson, is somewhat anterior to A.D. 388, enables us to fix the dates of Skandasishya as well as his father

¹ S.I.I., vol. ii, part v, p. 502. ² 'The Pallavas,' J. I. II., vol. ii, part i, p. 39.

Vīrakūrcha of the Vēlūrpāļayam record. Allowing a period of about thirty years for these two kings we arrive at about A.D. 358 for the date of the accession of Vīrakūrcha. According to Mr. Krishna Sastri, this Skaņdašishya is perhaps identical with the Skaņdašishya of the Tirukkaļukkunram inscription, who made a grant to the Malasthana temple at the above-mentioned village and spoken of as a former king. The late Mr. Venkayya in his article on this inscription suggested that Skaņdašishya is identical with Skaņdavarman; but as there are several Skaņdavarmans in the Pallava record it is difficult to identify the exact individual mentioned in the Tirukkaļukunram inscription.

The Sanskrit Charters.-We may now proceed to examine in detail the genealogical portion of other copper-plate charters of this period. We have already pointed out that these charters have been assigned on palæographical grounds to the fifth and the sixth centuries of the Christian era. One peculiarity of the charters of this period is that they do not furnish any genealogical list prior to the great grandfather of the ruling sovereign who is the donor. The habit of including a mythical and quasi-historical pedigree, along with the immediate ancestral line, appears to have originated only in and after the seventh century in the Pallava family. About six of these Sanskrit charters have been discovered mostly in the northern districts, and have been edited with text and translations in the Epigraphia Indica. Four of these refer to royal camps from which the respective grants were issued, viz. Palakkada,2 Daśanapura, Mēnmatūra, and Tāmrāpa. Almost all these grants furnish four generations of kings including the donor. There is considerable difference of opinion as to the order in which these kings are to be chronologically represented. In other words the relative position of the kings mentioned in these records and the chronology to be adopted for them are uncertain and far from settled. There exists also considerable difference of opinion among scholars as regards the identification of the various royal camps from which these charters were issued. None of these places Tämrāpa, Palakkada, Daśanapura, or Mēnmatūra has been identified definitely although a suggestion had been made by the late Mr. Venkayya1 that they are to be looked for in the vicinity of the region comprised by the modern Nellore District. According to certain scholars the fact that the charters of these Pallava kings are addressed from these camps, and not from the capital city of Kanchipuram, indicates that the Pallava kings who issued these charters had lost hold of Kanchipuram through some cause now unknown, and retired to the Telugu districts bordering on Nellore where they continued their rule. This line of argument was adopted by the late Mr. Venkayya,2 and is still maintained by some of the officers of the Epigraphy Department. A They advocate what has been called the theory of a Chola interregnum during the Pallava rule according to which the Pallava kings soon after the period of the members of the Prakrit charters were driven away from Kānchi by the Chola king Karikāla. According to the exponents of this view the Pallavas would appear to have taken possession of the city only in the days of Kumäravishnu who is described in the Velurpalayam plates to have captured Kānchi. We shall revert to this theory of a Chola interregnum a little later.

See Venkayya, Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 276.
An unsuccessful attempt is made to identify Palakka and Palakkada with Nellore in the Madras Christian College Magazine for January 1927, p. 42.

Various Orders of Succession.—According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil the series of kings Skandavarman—Kumāravishņu—Buddhavarman I—Kumāravishņu (donor) of the Chandalūr plates, ruled in Kānchi before the series, Simhavarman (mentioned in the Uruvappalli plates) Skandavarman and Nandivarman, and that, owing to the resemblance of the Chandalūr plates and the Uruvappalli plates, Kumāravishņu I would have been the immediate predecessor of Simhavarman of Kānchi. But a close examination of the copper-plates of this period shows that the Chandalür plates are by no means the most ancient of these, as in the opinion of M. Jouveau-Dubreuil. The style and the language employed, from the use of numerical symbols and the citation of date after the manner of the earlier Prakrit charters and the spaces marked between words, almost clearly suggest proximity to the Āndhra period. If such be the case the Ōmgōdu grant (No. 1) is the most ancient of the Sanskrit charters that we have.

¹ An. Rep. Ep. for 1905, p. 47.
² A. S. R. for 1906-7, p. 224.
³ S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 503.

We have already seen that the Vēlürpāļayam plates supply the following names among the early members of the Sanskrit period:-

Kālabhartr
| Chūta-pallava
| Vīrakūrcha
| Skandašishya
| Kumāravishņu, etc.

The Ömgödu (No. 1) charter gives the following order:

Kumäravishnu

Skandavarman | | Vîravarman

Vijayaskandavarman

Mr. Krishna Sastri identifies Vīravarman of this charter with the Vīravarman of the published copper-plate charters and with the Vīrakūrchavarman of the Darši record. 'If Vīravarman's identity is thus established, it must be easy to see that his father Skaņdavarman would be the first king of that name mentioned in the published copper-plate grant and that Vijayaskaņdavarman, his son, would be identical with Skaņdavarman II. Kumāravishņu, the first king mentioned, and the father of Skaņdavarman I, is probably to be identified with Kālabhartr of the Vēlūrpāļayam plates' though there may be very little in common between the two names.' Thus Mr. Krishna Sastri would identify the first four kings mentioned in the Vēlūrpāļayam plates with those mentioned in the Ōmgōdu (I) copper-plates which may be represented as follows:—

³ Sec Ep. Ind., vol. xv, p. 251, footnote 2,

Kālabhartṛ ... Kumāravishņu Chūta-pallava ... Skaņdavarman Vīrakūrcha ... Vīravarman

Skandaśishya ... Vijayaskandavarman

Kumāravishņu ... Kumāravishņu.

Before examining the view of Mr. Krishna Sastri let us state the genealogical information from the other charters for his period. The Uruvappalli plates, adated in the eleventh year of Simhavarman, although the donor was Yuvamahārāja-Vishnugöpavarman, give the following genealogy:—

Skandavarman Viravarman Skandavarman

Y. M. Vishnugopa (donor)

From the fact that the Uruvappalli plates are dated in the eleventh year of Simhavarman it was held by the late Dr. Fleet that Y. M. Vishnugopa was a younger brother of Simhavarman, and that he probably never reigned at all.

The Mangadur grant 3 gives the succession in the following order:—

Viravarman
Skandavarman
Y. M. Vishnugopavarman

Dharmamahārāja Simhavarman

¹ S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 503. * Ind. Ant., vol. v, p. 51. ² Ibid., vol. vi, p. 155.

The Pikira plates 1 furnish us with the accompanying order which is almost similar to the previous one:-

Viravarman | Skandavarman | Vishnugopavarman | Simbavarman (donor)

Thus these three plates together supply five generations of kings; the Chandalür plates, which, as we already mentioned, appear to be posterior to these records in point of antiquity give three further generations of kings from Skandavarman, who, we might regard, was identical with Skandavarman II. The Chandalür² plates, we saw, supplies the following names in the order noted below:—

Skaņdavarman
|
Kumāravishņu I
|
Buddhavarman
|
Kumāravishņu II (donor)

The Udayendiram plates3 supply the series:-

Skandavarman
Simhavarman
Skandavarman
I
Nandivarman (donor).

The Vāyalūr pillar inscription becomes acceptable from No. 29, and agrees with the Vēlūrpāļayam grant thus

Ep. Ind., vol. viii, p. 159.
 Ibid, vol. viii, p. 233.
 Ibid, vol. iii, p. 142.

continuing the succession to the time of Simhavishnu as will be seen by the following :-

Simhavarman (Vāvalūr list 29)

Vishnugopa

Simhayarman

Simhavishnu

Mahendrayarman I

The whole series of Pallava kings from the beginning to the days of Simhavishnu may be represented by the following table :-

Bappa

Sivaskanda (Circa. A.D. 220)

Buddhavarman

Vishnugopa (A.D. 340)

(Ömgödu-Uruvapalli plates) Kālabhartr

(Kumāravishņu)

Chūta-pallava

(Skandavarman) (Ömgödu-Uruvapalli plates)

(Married Naga princess)

Virakūrcha (Virakūrchavarman)

Skandasishya (Donor, Ömgödu Plates)

Simhayarman

Skandavarman

Nandivarman I (Udayendiram)

Y. M. Vishnugopa

Vishnugopavarman

Simhayarman II

Vishnugopavarman

Simhayarman III

Simhavishnu

Mahendravarman, etc.

Kumāravishņu I

Kumāravishnu II.

Buddhayarman

The above table is only tentative and subject to alteration if necessary on other more satisfactory interpretation of the charters, or when the discovery of new inscriptions, or copper charters should call for such. It is just possible that there might not be any direct connection between the members of the Prakrit charters, those of the Sanskrit charters and the members of the Simhavishnu dynasty, as is assumed here. But this arrangement is based on the evidence of the Väyalür pillar record and that of Vēlūrpāļayam plates strengthened by the consideration that the Pallava kings of these charters style themselves in these records as members of the Bharadvaiagotra. The position of Vishnugopa, the adversary of Samudragupta in the table, is uncertain. We have already hinted the possibility of his being identical with the first of the Vishnugopas mentioned in the Vayalur pillar record of Rājasimha's reign. We have also alluded to the date suggested by Mr. Shama Sastri in his new light on the Gupta era which at the present state of discussion need not be regarded as having been established beyond doubt.

The earliest member of the Sanskrit charters figures as Kālabhartr in the Vēlūrpāļayam plates, a name which along with his son's name Chuta-pallava, sounds more eponymous than real. Kālabhartr is presumably identical with Kānagopa of the Kasakkudi plates.1 In the above arrangement we have indicated the possibility of Kalabhartr being identical with the Kumāravishņu I of Ömgödu No. 1 and Chūta-pallava with Skandavarman I. Mr. Krishna Sastri who also makes this identification says that there is nothing in common between Kālabhartr and Kumāravishņu.2 The description of Kālabhartr as the 'head-jewel of the family ' and as Vishnu the husband of Indira (Lakshmi) in verse 6 of the Vēlūrpālayam plates lends support to the identification of this king with

S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 307.

^{*} Ep. Ind., vol. xv, p. 251. Also vol. xviii, p. 149, where he definitely gives up the identification. This is hardly justified as the writer of the Väyalür pillar inscription has merely put the lists one after the other without attempting to find out actual relationship between the different succession lists. Ed.

Kumāravishņu of the Ōmgōdu grant which suggests that his other name was a synonym of Vishņu. It is even possible that this Kumāravishņu whom we identified with Kālabhartī was the same person as Vishņugopa, the adversary of Samudragupta. This identification has not been made hitherto, although there is nothing unreasonable in this view.

As was already indicated, the actual dates and the duration of the individual reigns of the Pallava kings of this period are approximate so far. Obviously it is not possible for all the sixteen kings and more to have been on the Pallava throne within the short period of about 200 years (A.D. 350 to 550). It is evident from the charters themselves that certain members of the dynasty referable to this period were simply Vuvamahārājas or princes only, as in the case of Vishnugopathe prince of the Uruvapalli plates. We have already indicated the facts known regarding Kalabhartr (Kumaravishņu) and Chūta-pallava (Skandavarman) from the copperplates of this period. We have shown that Chūta-pallava alias Skandavarman might have been the chief who married the Naga princess and acquired simultaneously a wife and a kingdom. His son was Vîrakûrcha, identical probably with Vīrakūrchavarman of the Darśi fragment.1 His son was Skandavarman (II) the donor of Ömgödu plates who is described in this record as one 'who was true to his word, who day by day increased religious merit by gift of cows, gold and land, and who always desired to serve Gods and Brahmans. and ably understood the purport of all Sastras.' From the date of the engraving of the grant which is mentioned as the Vijayasamvalsarē-trayatrimsē (that is in the victorious year thirty-three which was the third fortnight of the winter and the thirteenth day) we may conclude that Skandavarman's reign lasted at least for thirty-three years.

Simhavarman.—The next Pallava king was Simhavarman in whose eleventh year the Uruvapalli plates of Y. M. Vishnugopa is dated. It is not apparent why Y. M. Vishnugopa should have addressed the grant in the reign of Simhavarman. The probability is that he did not reign and therefore dated the record in the reign of his elder brother, or possibly in that of his. In the latter case this Simhavarman becomes identical with the donor of the four grants, the Omgodu plates dated in the fourth year of his reign in the month of Vaisāka Śuklapakshapanchami addressed from Tämräpa, the Pikira grant dated in fifth year and issued from Menmatura, the Uruvappalli plates dated in the eleventh year of his reign, and issued from Palakkada, and the Mangalur grant issued from Vijaya-Daśanapura and dated in the eighth year of Simhavarman II. Thus we have for this king at least four different copper-plate charters dated in the different years of the reign and issued in different places which were obviously the places where the king happened to be in camp just when the grants were issued. It has been already pointed out that these places Vijaya Tāmrāpasthāna, Mēnmātura, Daśanapura and Palakkada have not been identified though the suggestion has been made that they should be looked for in the Nellore District. The late Mr. Venkayya writes in his Ancient History of the Nellore District, 1 that it is not impossible that Dasanapura was the ancient name of the modern village of Darsi. It is called Darsi and Darisi in inscriptions of the fourteenth century found as the place.' He also thinks that the place might have been the capital at the time that the Mangadur grant was issued in the eighth year of Simhavarman. If this is so why is it not possible to hold Palakkada, Tāmrāpa, and Mēnmātura also at the capital of Simhavarman? But such an assumption does not seem to be justified unless we have good reason for regarding that this period was one of constant warfare, and that the kingdom of Simhavarman was frequently threatened. with the result that he had to be continuously changing his capital from one seat to another. But there is no definite evidence to prove that this was a fact. It is assumed by certain scholars that the Pallava kings of this period had lost their possession of Kanchi and retired to the Telugu districts in and around Nellore, wherefrom they continued to rule and issue their copper-plates. This explains according to them the charters of Simhavarman and others during this period being addressed not from Kanchipuram as in the case of earlier copper-plates but from places in the Telugu districts. For instance Mr. Krishna Sastri says:— . . . 'About A.D. 350 the Pallavas,—perhaps on account of the disturbances caused by the victorious campaign of Samudragupta from the north or owing to the rise of the Kadambas mentioned in the Talgunda inscription¹ were dispossessed of their territory round Kanchi and pushed back further into the interior.' Again the same authority says²:—

¹ Ind. Ant., 1908, p. 283.

'Thus we get from several copper-plates published so far, six generations of Pallavas, with names of nine Pallava kings who called themselves Pallava-Mahārājas and Pallava-Dharma-mahārājas, of the Bhāradvāja-gotra until one of them, Kumāravishņu I (II?) reconquered Kānchīpura, evidently from the Chōlas, who had taken possession of it sometime subsequent to Vishnugopa the contemporary of Samudragupta and had established themselves in the Topda-country.' Thus according to this view there was a Chōla interregnum at Kānchī and a break in the line of Pallava kings during the period of the Sanskrit charters.

Is the Chola Interregnum Possible?—This interregnum according to which a number of Pallava kings in the fourth and the fifth century are supposed to have lost possession of Kānchi some time in the fourth century has become a favourite notion among the epigraphists which however does not appear to be supported by the historical facts of the period known to us. Even the late Mr. Venkayya has expressed himself in favour of the theory of a Chöla interlude in the midst of the Pallava rule. In his 'Ancient History of the Nellore District's for instance, dealing with the Pallava kings of this period he says, 'The

Ep. Ind., vol. viii, p. 28.
 Ibid., vol. xv, No. 11, p. 249.
 Ind. Ant., 1908, p. 284, extent of Pallava dominions during this period from the fourth century to the end of the sixth century A.D. cannot be ascertained. At any rate they appear to have been in possession of the modern Nellore District or at least a portion of it. In fact four of the above-mentioned grants are from that district. Kānchi which was the capital during the reign of Sivaskandavarman and Vishnugopa, figures as such only in the last two 1 of the above-mentioned grants which are evidently later than the rest.' 'If this is not due to a mere accident it may be that the Pallavas had to retreat from Conjecuaram owing, perhaps to a coalition among the Chola, Pandya and the Chera kings, or to the domination of one of them. In this case, the Pallavas, had probably to confine themselves to the Nellore District or to a portion of it, where the villages granted in two of the copper-plate inscriptions may be traced.'

Some Objections .- But as against this mere supposition, there are serious difficulties in the way of our accepting the assumption of any break in the main line of Pallava kings from the earliest times. At any rate the mere fact of certain copperplates being addressed from places situated in the Telugu districts far away from the capital city cannot be held to support the view that the king or kings who issued them should necessarily have lost possession of Kanchi. Such at any rate is not the indication that we get from the large numbers of copper-plates and stone records of the Pallava kings obtained in various parts of the country. In these records there is not the remotest suggestion that the Pallava kings at any period in their rule lost possession of the city of Conjecuaram for any appreciable length of time. A reference in the Vēlūrpālayam plates2 of Nandivarman III to the capture of Kānchi has curiously been interpreted as meaning that Kumāravishņu for the first time after the capture of the city by the Cholas in the days of Karikala, recaptured it. Such an assumption appears however to be unwarranted. In the first place it is just possible that the capture of Kāñchi alluded to in the Vēiūrpālyam plates is a reference to his having obtained possession of the city from a collateral cousin, or some other foreign power, such as the Kadambas, which had obtained possession of the city for a short period. In the second place if the fact of the capture of Känchi from the Cholas is at all true, it is strange that the Vēlūrpāļayam plates should not have made mention of the fact in recording such a distinguished achievement, more especially as Buddhavarma another king is mentioned as the 'submarine-fire to the ocean-like army of the Cholas' Chola-sainyārnava-vādabhāgni (verse 8). But the insuperable difficulty in postulating a Chôla occupation in the interval between the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters and those of Simhavishnu, based merely upon the stray reference to the recapture of Kanchipuram by Kumaravishnu and on the fact of the charters of the Pallavas for some period being dated from places outside the capital at Kānchi, lies in the impossibility of accommodating the reign of Karikala and all the events connected with the history of his reign to this period. According to any rational scheme of chronology it is very difficult to find a place for Karikāla and his successors midway between the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters and those of the Sanskrit charters as suggested by the epigraphists. The facts relied upon by them as evidence for this position for Karikāla are derived from late Eastern Chāļukya copper plates some of the facts being incredible in themselves.1 Altogether the data for the Chola occupation of Kānchi during the Pallava rule are too meagre and unsatisfactory to be seriously considered as justifying the assumption of a Chola interregnum.

Chandalür and Udayëadiram records.

Verse S, S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 508.

We have already referred the four Sanskrit charters issued respectively from Ömgödu, Pikira, Daśanapura and Palakkada between the fourth and the eleventh years of Simhavarman to this reign. The probable date of this king is derivable from purely epigraphic and palæographic evidence as the middle of the fifth century. But the discovery of the Lokavibhaga, a Jain manuscript, has gone a great way towards fixing the actual period of rule of this king.

The 'Lokavibhaga' Datum .- This leads to the initial date of the Pallava king Simhavarman as A.D. 436. According to the Digambara, Jain manuscript, Lokavibhaga, Saka 380 corresponded to the twenty-second regnal year of Simhavarman, king of Kānchi, the year in which the work was completed. The reference makes it clear that the first year of this king must have been A.D. 436, and that this king continued to rule for at least a period of twenty-two years.

Saka 380 is apparently the year in which the copying work was finished by Sarvanandi and the author of the work Simhasūri, probably flourished at an earlier period. The twenty-second stanza was sent to Mahamahopādyāya Sudhākara Dvivedi, Benares, for favour of calculation. is no question about the correctness of the date. Pāṭalika, the village in which Sarvanandi copied the work, is perhaps identical with Patalipura in South Arcot District, at which according to Periyapuranam there was a big Jaina monastery in the seventh century A.D. . . . Panarashtra may be identified with Perumbanappadi (the Brhad Banas laid under tribute by Mayura Sarman, Kadamba) the province over which the Banas ruled.

As regards the actual period of Simhavarman (II) we have already pointed out that being probably identical with the king of the name referred to in the Penugonda plates of the Western Ganga king Mādhavavarman II, his reign must have been at the same period as that of Harivarman the Ganga prince whom he is said to have installed on the throne. Judged palæographically the characters of the Penugonda plates point to their having been inscribed in the fifth century A.D. Dr. Fleet was also of opinion1 that 'A.D. 475 seems a very good date for it.' If the plates which are dated in the reign of Madhava II, are dated about the year A.D. 475, Simhavarman the contemporary of Ayyavarman whom he installed on the Ganga throne must have flourished immediately before. Hence it is not improbable that Simhavarman II began his rule sometime about the third decade of the fifth century which is also the date that we arrive at by the Lokavibhaga datum, equating the twenty-second year of Simhavarman with the Saka year 380. This yields for Simhavarman, as we saw, the year A.D. 436 as the initial year, which tallies both with the palæographical indications of Penukonda and the Omgodu plates as well as the other considerations relating to the date of the Pallava kings who followed him. A calculation backward from the known date of Simhavishnu also leads us to the same period.

An attempt made to belittle the value of this datum furnished by the Lokavibhaga for the initial date of Simhavarman II requires careful consideration. Mr. H. Krishna Sastriar, relying upon what he interprets as a reference to an eclipse in the Omgodu plates, lines 31-32, dated in the fourth year of his reign, considers the datum of the Lokavibhaga invalidated. The fourth year of Simhavarman II, according to the Lokavibhagu, corresponds to the year A.D. 440 in which year there happens to be no solar eclipse during the month of Chaitra. But this objection of Mr. Sastriar is based upon a wrong interpretation of the object of the grant of the Omgodu plates and of the expression grahananimittam in line 31. In the first place the plates are dated in the fifth day of the bright fortnight, of Vaiśāka, whereas if the occasion of the grant had been the solar eclipse the record would have been dated on the new moon day. This difficulty Mr. Krishna Sastriar gets over by supposing that the grant which was actually made on the new moon day of Chaitra, a possible day for the nearest solar eclipse, was actually engraved 'on the plates five days later." The explanation does not appear to be at all satisfactory. The expression 'grahananimittam', appears to convey, as has been pointed out, the meaning of 'for the sake of acceptance' rather than 'on account of the eclipse', Ep. Ind. vol. xv pp. 252-55.

as it looks strange that the copper-plate record should not mention the character of the eclipse and other circumstances connected with it. 'It is very unusual,' says Prof. Krishnaswami Aiyangar to indicate an eclipse in this manner, without saying what eclipse it is, and otherwise defining the Punyakala. What is worse in the interpretation of the epigraphist is that the date of the grant is actually specified in the concluding portion. "Sa vijayarājya-Samvatsarē-Chaturthē-Vaišāka-Sukla-paksha-Panchamyām dattam." This is quite unequivocal. In the face of this it would be difficult to prove that the grant was made on an eclipse day from the document. The difficulty and inconsistency are the results of the interpretation, and neither the author nor the scribe could be held responsible for the blunder which is not theirs.'

Successors of Simhavarman II.—Very little is known about the successors of Simhavarman II till we come to the accession of Simhavishnu. The Väyalür pillar inscription which is relied upon by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil for this period gives the names of the following kings in the order of succession mentioned below:—

Simhavarman II (A.D. c. 436-460).

Vishnug opavarman 11.

Simhavarman III.

Simhavishnu (A.D. c. 575-600).

The Vēlūrpāļayam plates give the following names for this period. After a host of kings passed away with Vishnugopa, came Nandivarman who is reported in this record to have caused a 'powerful snake' to dance. Then followed Simhavarman who is said to have wiped off the pride of his enemies. After him came Simhavishnu. As we already saw there is a slight discrepancy in the order of succession herein stated and those given in other plates. The probability seems to be that soon after the reigns of Simhavarman II and Skandavarman II the contemporaries of the Western Ganga kings Ayyavarman and Mādhavavarman II about the close of the fifth century A.D., the Pallava kings Kumāravishņu II who captured Kānchi, Nandivarman I, Simhavarman III, occupied the Pallava throne before Simhavishņu, about the last quarter of the sixth century, commenced to rule at Kānchipuram. Practically nothing is known of the reign of these kings from the copper-plates and inscriptions of this period until we arrive at the reign of Simhavishņuvarman, or Mahēndravarman I, his son and successor, whose accession marks the commencement of the age of the Great Pallavas which lasted for two centuries and a half from about A.D. 600 to 850.

CHAPTER V

CONTEMPORARY POLITICAL POWERS. THE SALANKAYANAS, KADAMBAS, ETC.

THE most important among the contemporary royal dynasties that ruled in the Dakhan during this period, contemporaneous with the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters, were the Kadambas, the Vākāṭakas, the Sālankā-yanas, the Western Gangas, the Vishnukundins, and the chieftains of various places in the region around the mouth of the Krishna and the Godavari figuring in the Allahabad pillar inscription already noticed, one of whom was probably a Sālankāyana-Hastivarman of Vengi. It is unnecessary to give here an account of all these powers from the available records. A short account of the Sālankāyanas, the Kadambas and the Vishnukundins who appear to have come into close contact with the Pallavas are given here as far as the information from the records permits.

The chronology of the Kadambas cannot be regarded as having been definitely fixed. The period of the earliest of the Kadamba kings Mayūrašarman who is described as a Brahman in the Tālgunda pillar inscription has been fixed by scholars from internal evidence and palæographical indications as the middle of the fourth century, though Mr. Shama Sastriar in his Mysore Archaeological Reports is inclined to carry back his period considerably earlier.¹

The Tālgunda pillar inscription of Kakutsthavarman gives a glimpse into the circumstances leading to the establishment of the political power of this Brahman dynasty in the Dakkan. This record in graphic language describes how the first member of this dynasty Mayūrašarman, a Brahman belonging to the Mānavyasa-gotra, and a native of Sthānukundūr came to the city of Kanchipuram for completing his Vedic studies. how he had a quarrel with a Pallava horseman, and how not bearing to be told that the Brahman caste was inferior to that of the Kshatriyas he put himself at the head of a band of adventurers and attacked the Pallava sovereigns in the inaccessible forests of Śri-Parvata. Then with the aid of the Brihat-Banas and others he founded the Kadamba kingdom of which Banavasi was the capital. The Pallava kings had to admit his claims as a ruling power and had to effect a temporary compromise. Now we must try to find out what was the probable period of Mayurasarman and who his Pallaya contemporary was. As we have already suggested, this dismemberment of the Pallava kingdom must have followed the confusion which resulted from the invasion of Samudragupta about A.D. 340. The Kadamba Prakrit inscription of Malavalli ' written as it is in Prakrit, though it does not mention the name of the king, may be taken to refer to the most ancient king of the Kadambas presumably Mayūraśarman. In regard to his Pallava contemporary only the vaguest guess can be made. As we have assigned Mayūraśarman to about A.D. 350 his Pallava contemporary must have been either Vishnugopa or his immediate successors Virakurcha or Skandavarman I.

Of the successors of Mayūraśarman, Kangavarman and Bhagīratha attributable to the second half of the fifth century A. D., probably carried on hostile operations against the Pallava kings of the period. Of the others it appears that Raghu, Kakutsthavarman, Śāntivarman and his two sons Mrigēśavarman and Mandhātrivarman ruled during the sixth century A.D. and were evidently contemporaneous with Vīravarman, Skandavarman II, Simhavarman, and Skandavarman III of the Pallavas. The southern conquest of Prithvīsena, the Vākāṭaka king, who, according to the Ajanta inscription² is described as having defeated the

¹ Ind. Ant., vol. xivi, p. 154. ² Cave No. 16, Arch. Sur. W. Ind.., vol. 4, p. 53 ff.

Kuntalas, i.e. the Kadamba king, probably took place about the period, A.D. 350-360 and the Kadamba king must have been Kangavarman who is described in inscriptions as having been engaged in 'lofty exploits and in terrible wars.' Of the others we know that Kakutstha, who is ascribable to the first quarter of the fifth century, was the donor of the Talgunda inscription. The marriage of Narendrasena, the grandson of Prabhāvati Gupta with the daughter of the king of Kuntaja named Ajjhitabhattarika is probably to be attributed as Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil suggests to Kakutstha's reign. Thus it turns out that Kakutsthavarman's boast, in the Talgunda inscription, that he gave his daughter to Guptas and other kings would be correct if the Gupta-Vākātaka king, Narendrasena, was the son-in-law of this king. According to our arrangement of Pallava chronology he must have been a contemporary of Simhavarman II and it was probably during this period that the installation of the Western Ganga kings Ayyayarman and Madhayayarman must have taken place. Of Santivarman who succeeded Kakutsthavarman on the Kadamba throne very little is known. Of his sons Mrigesavarman and Mandhätrivarman who together ruled for the rest of the fifth century we have some records. According to the Halsi plates dated in the eighth year of his reign Mrigesa uprooted the Gangas and was a very fire of destruction to the Pallavas.1 We learn from another record2 that his queen was called Prabhāvatī who was born in the Kaikeya family. Almost contemporaneous with the reigns of Santivarman, Mrigēśavarman and Mandhātrivarman, A.D. 450-500, the younger branch of the Kadamba family Krishnavarman I, the son of Kakutstha and the elder brother of Santivarman with Prince Dēvavarman as Yuvamahārāja ruled at Triparvata. Soon after the death of Mandhätrivarman the throne of the Kadambas passed to Ravivarman who, according to the Halsi plates, is said to have acquired regal power by the strength and prowess of his own arm which means that there was some trouble in his succession and that he had to fight for the throne. According to another record,1 he is said to have slain Vishnuvarman, presumably a collateral cousin and descendant of Krishnavarman, and uprooted Chandadanda of Records dated in the fifth year of Ravivarman, and the thirty-fifth year have been discovered. He was followed by Harivarman at Vaijayanti till about A.D. 550 when the rise of Pulakēśin I probably put an end to, or obscured, his power. The subsequent history of the Kadambas does not concern us here. Krishnavarman, his son Ajavarman, Bhogivarman and Vishnuvarman are known to have ruled as kings from recent records. That the Kadambas continued to be powerful as late as the end of the eighth century is seen from the mention in the Vēlūrpāļayam plates2 that the Pallava king Dantivarman married Aggalanimmati, 'the daughter of the celebrated king and a crest-jewel of the Kadamba family.'3

Halsi plates, Ind. Ant., vol vi, p. 24.
 Mys. Arch. Rep. for 1910-11, p. 35.

Sālankāyanas, circa A.D. 350 to 500 .- Almost contemporaneously with the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters, may be placed the Salankayana dynasty. The word Salankayana appears originally to have been the name of a Vedic Rishi. There are nearly five grants for this dynasty that are available to us. If Hastivarman of Vengi, who figures among the adversaries of Samudragupta in the Allahabad inscription, was a Salankayana (identified by Vincent Smith as a Pallava) he may be regarded as the earliest member of this family known hitherto. The Ellore Prakrit* plate the alphabets of which closely resemble the Pikira, Mangalur and Uruvapalli plates, are dated in the thirteenth year of Māhāraja-Vijayadēvayarman, and were issued from Vengipuram. These plates describe Vijayadevavarman as the performer of the Asvamedha the fervent Mahesvara and the devotee at the feet of the Holy Chitrarathasvāmi. The grant is addressed to the villagers of Ellora which may be identified with the modern town of Ellore.

¹ Ind. Ant., vol. vi, p. 30.

³ Ibid., verse 18.

^{*} S.I.I., vol. ii, part v. p. 511. * Ep. Ind., vol. ix, p. 56.

Another grant¹ of the Sālankāyanas written in Sanskrit and therefore considered to be posterior to the Prakrit charter already mentioned, records that Vijayanandivarman son of Chandavarman issued it in the eighth year of his reign from the city of Vengipura. As regards the popular identification of Vengi with the Pedda Vengi² it must be pointed out that, as there are no less than four places bearing the name of Vengi in the Northern Circars alone, it is possible that the usual identification should not be regarded as final on the matter.

Recently two more copper-plates 3 have been discovered by the late Mr. K. V. Lakshmana Rao which, along with the other records, give nearly six generations of the dynasty:—

The following is the order of succession adopted by Mr.

Lakshmana Rao:-

C. 350. Hastivarman of Vengi
375. Vijayadëvavarman
400. Vijayanandivarman
425. Buddhavarma
450. Chandavarma
475. Vijayanandivarman

The first of the newly-discovered Kanteru plates records a grant of Vijayaskandavarman, who is there described as meditating on the feet of the holy Chitrarathasvāmi and as belonging to the family of Sālankāyanas, to one Šivarāya in a village called Chinnapura in the Kudrahāravishaya in the fifth year of the king's reign on the full moon day in the month of Vaišāka.

500. Vijavaskandavarman

The second registers a gift to one Svämichandra a piece of and in the village of Kuruvāda by Mahārāja Śrī Nandivarman.

³ Viz. Col. Mag., October, 1922.

³ Ind. Ant., vol. v, p. 175 and plate. ³ Mad. Jour of Lit. and Sc., vol. xi, p. 392.

A word may be said about the religious leaning of these kings and their relation with the Paliava kings. As regards the first we can only say that the peculiar cult of the Sālankāyanas who called themselves Bhagavat-Chitrarathasvāmi-Pāda-nudyāla may have reference to their tutelary deity, the God of Chitraratha. This term probably refers to the worship by the Sālankāyanas of the Sun-god, and the representation of the figure of the sun in some of the charters issued by these sovereigns, lends some support to this view.

As regards the other point, namely, the relation of the Sālankāvanas with the Pallavas the following points may be noted. To begin with, there is a close resemblance between the names of the members of the two dynasties such as Skandavarma, Buddhavarma and Nandivarma which also occur in the Pallava copper-plates. The figure of the seated bull which frequently finds a place in the seals of the Pallava charters also figures in the Sälankävana charters. Finally the fact that for more than six generations the Pallavas and the Sālankāvanas are never known to have come into conflict even once is a significant one, and probably indicates that the Salankayanas were on friendly terms with the Pallavas and continued to rule independently along with them in amity. This probably indicates that the two families were in some manner, hitherto unknown, related to one another. It is just possible that the Pallavas and the Sālankāyanas had a common ancestry as Sālankāyana is a Gotra belonging to the Bharadvaja-clan. The Salankayanas appear to have exercised political power from about A.D. 340 to about A.D. 480, when the rise of Vishnukundins, and the ascendency of the Vākāṭakas put an end to the political power of these people who are no more heard of in South Indian history.

The Vishnukundins, circa A.D. 450 to 550.—The origin and significance of the term Vishnukundin like that of other dynastic names is buried in obscurity. The conjecture has been put forward that their name is connected with Vinukonda in the Krishna District, which appears to have been the cradle of their power. The first Vishnukundin king Mādhavarman I appears to have owed his throne to his marriage with a princess of the Vākatakas, though the Chikkula plates 1 which mention the fact do not specify whose daughter the princess was.

The only class of evidence available to us to write an account of the Vishnukundins is the inscriptional one. About four records have been discovered. These include the Ramatirtham. Chikkula and Pulimboru grants all of which were discovered only in comparatively recent years. The first two of these have been critically edited in the volumes of Epigraphia Indica. According to these records, Mādhava I was succeeded on the throne by his son Vikramendravarman I, then by Indrabhattarakayarman and Vikramendrayarman II. The last mentioned record takes the line still further and mentions the names of Vikramendra, Govindavarman, and Madhavavarman II. Practically nothing is known of the first two sovereigns-Madhava I and Vikramendravarman I. The Ramatirtham plates 2 help us to know that Indrabhattarakavarman must have ruled at least for a period of thirty-seven years as these plates were This document consists of three recorded in that year. copper-plates from Ramatirtham written in Sanskrit prose, and record the fact that Indravarman granted to a certain Brahman the village of Peruvadaka in Plaki-Rashtra (l. 6). The record also mentions that Madhavavarman performed eleven horsesacrifices, and hundreds of other sacrifices. Then after mentioning that Vikramendra was an ornament of both the families, the Vākātakas and the Vishnukundins, the record states the important fact that Indravarman encountered ' in hundred-thousands of battles numerous four-tusked elephants ' (1. 5) a probable allusion to the fact that this king spent the major part of his reign in fighting with his enemies.3

The last of the Vishnukundins, known as Mādhava II, is credited with the achievement of having crossed the Godavari evidently with a view to extend his dominions. Unfortunately the Western Chāļukyas under Pulakēsin had grown powerful in this reign, and the advance of the Vishnukundin power was not only stopped but their dominion appears to have been annexed to that of the Chāļukyas.

¹ Ep. Ind., vol. iv. p. 193 ff. ⁸ Ibid.
² According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil there was a coalition of kings who attacked this sovereign which probably included Harisena, the Väkätaka. Cf. Ancient History of Deccan, p. 91.

According to M. Jouveau-Dubreuil the rock-cut monuments of Undavalli, Sittanagaram, Bezwada, and Mogulrazapuram were the work of the Vishnukundins.¹ There is, however, considerable difference of opinion on this matter.

Before concluding the account of the Vishnukundins, their relationship with the Pallava dynasty may be alluded to. At present this theory of the Pallava-Vishnukundin relationship rests almost entirely on the mere resemblance of names of the two dynasties and is open to suspicion. Dr. Jouveau-Dubreuil noticing for the first time the resemblance of the names of the Vishnukundin king Vikramendra and Mahendravikrama, the Pallaya king, was led to postulate an unrecorded marriage relation between the daughter of Vikramendra I and Simhavishnuvarman whose son through this Vishnukundin alliance was named according to the usual Hindu custom after the name of the grandfather on the mother's side as Mahendravikrama.2 According to the same authority the rock-cut temples excavated by Mahendravarman I, in the various parts of the Tamil country, coupled with the mention of the name of the king Mahendravikrama in the Trichinopoly cave inscription lend considerable support to this relationship of Vishnukundins and the Pallavas. But at present this theory rests purely on the resemblance of names and is unsupported by any piece of positive evidence, literary or other, discovered so far. In none of the published inscriptions is it so much as Pallaeas, p. 33.

This is far too fanciful to build such a theory on. Mahēndravikrama means possessed of the valour of Mahēndra. Vikramēndra means an Indra in valour. They may amount to the same in point of sense ultimately; but they are different names and differently formed. The two terms are not without substantial difference of meaning to the Sanskritist. Ed.

alluded to that Simhavishnu, the father of Mahendravarman and the founder of the line of the great Pallavas or Kanchi, entered into a matrimonial alliance with the Vishnukundins; nor is the mere resemblance of the names1 alone sufficient for postulating such a relationship as this. Nor is the resemblance between Vikramendra and Mahendravikrama quite so close. Finally there is no clear evidence that the style of Mahendravarman cave temples were borrowed from Vishnukundin examples on the banks of the Krishna. The origin of the Undavalli caves and the actual kings who excavated them cannot be considered as finally settled, and not until this is done is it possible to assert that the art of Mahendravarman was derived from it. Mr. Sewell thought that these caves were the work of the Chalukyas.2 Mr. Krishna Sastrivar was struck with their resemblance with the caves of Orissa and would take them to the Andhra period.3 The genealogy of the Vishnukundins so far known may be represented as follows :-

Combined genealogy obtained from the Ramatirtham, Chikkula and Pulimboru grants:

Circa 475.

Mādhavavarman I

Vikramēndravarman I

Indrabhāttārakavarman II
Vikramēndravarman II
Vikramahēndra

Govindavarman

Mādhavavarman II

¹ The similarity does not take us far. They are hardly names but mere descriptive titles. See note on previous page. Ed.

² List of Ant., vol. i, p. 77.

³ Ep. Rep., Madras for 1909, part ii, p. 75.

CHAPTER VI

THE PALLAVA ASCENDENCY— THE DYNASTY OF SIMHAVISHNU, A.D. 575-900

INTRODUCTORY

ROM the beginning of the reign of Simhavishnu, also known as Simhavishnupottarayan and Avanisimha, about the last quarter of the sixth century, a new epoch begins in the history of the Pallava power. From this period onward the Pallava authority begins to penetrate much farther into the Tamil country than before. Again during this period flourished the greatest of the Saiva and Vaishnava saints, the majority of the Alvars and the Nayanmars who by their memorable religious propagandic work handed down in their hymns, were destined to revolutionize South Indian religious thought and outlook. In another respect also, this period of Pallava history is of special importance in South Indian history. It was during this period that a beginning is believed to have been made in the Tamil land to build temples and other monuments in stone instead of in perishable material such as wood and brick. This important change in the building material was destined in the course of a few centuries to cover the whole of the Southern India with a network of temples dedicated to Siva, Vishnu and Brahma. Above all, the active spread of Sanskrit culture and learning in the Tamil country was systematically and sedulously encouraged by the Pallava kings of this period, and recent research seems to support the view that some of the greatest poets and rhetoricians including Bhāravi and Dandin the authors of Kiratariuntya and Kavyadarsa, flourished in this age at the Pallava court at Kanchipuram.

Sources of Information for this Period.—For the earlier we had to depend almost wholly on copper-plate charters. But during this period (A.D. 575 to 900) inscriptions on stone appear to have become very popular in the Tamil country. We have therefore in addition to copper-plate grants large numbers of these stone inscriptions scattered throughout the Pallava dominions. Though some of these have been critically edited by Messrs. Hultzsch, Venkayya and others, the larger part of these still remain unedited and even unpublished. Of the stone inscriptions so far discovered nearly a hundred records are connected with the members of the Simhavishnu dynasty and bear the regnal years of these kings. They have for their object the registering of gifts of gold or land for temple services, or endowments for religious and secular learning by the kings, or other persons of distinction. These inscriptions which are for the most part very short, unlike the copper-plate records, do not furnish a genealogy. They mention usually the year of the ruling king when the inscription was put up and the gifts made. They consequently furnish little information either as regards the ancestry of the ruling sovereign or of any of his political achievements. But they give details as regards how the various gifts should be appropriated and furnish valuable glimpses into the social, economic and administrative arrangements of the times.

Apart from the inscriptions and copper-plate records dated directly in the years of the Pallava kings and discovered in the various parts of the Pallava kingdom, we have also records from the other contemporary dynasties such as those of Western Chālukyas, the early Pāndyas, the Rāshtrakūtas, the Gangas, Kadambas, the Bānas and the Muttaraiyans. The records of this period also mention the Pallavas coming into contact with the Malavas, Kalabhras, Chōlas, Kēralas, Sinhalas, Tuļus and the Konkaṇas; but we do not know much about the political condition of these people during this period,

Many of the inscriptions of the Pallava kings appear in temples and other monuments that they constructed during this age at Kānchipuram, and other places. The earliest of these are found in the cave-temples of the South Arcot, Trichinopoly and Chingleput Districts, and are dated in the reign of Mahēndravarman I. The others are found in the structural temples at the Seven Pagodas and at Kānchīpuram, such as the Kailāsanātha temple. The rest are distributed in various villages.

Literature.—We turn from the inscriptions and monuments to the evidence furnished by literature, both religious and secular. The bulk of the religious literature embodied in the Tevaram of Appar, Sambandar, and Sundarar and the Vaishnava Nalayiraprabandha belong to this period as also the Sanskrit works Mattavilasa and perhaps Kiratarjuniya, etc. These, however, do not compare favourably with the inscriptional records as historical documents. For one thing the hymns of the saints hardly mention contemporary political or other events with exceptions such as those in the poems of Tirumangai-Ālvār. In the next place there is no secular work in Tamil belonging to this period with the exception of

Sanskrit: Sanskrit work entitled Mattavilāsa-Prahasana, though mainly devoted to the description of the drunken revelry of a Kāpālikā, incidentally throws much light upon the contemporary religious atmosphere in the city of Kānchipuram. Moreover the work having been composed by one of the Pallava kings Mahēndravikrama, has a special interest to the student of Pallava history. Of greater importance, as throwing light on the encouragement of Sanskrit learning under the Pallava kings of this period may be mentioned the recent discovery of Dandin's Avantisunder the Pallava kings of the Madras darikathasara by the officers of the Madras Avantisundari-Oriental MSS. Library. This work mentions the kathasara Chāļukya Vishņuvardhana and the Western Ganga Durvinīta as having been contemporaries of Simhavishņu, and thus establishes a valuable synchronism in South Indian history hitherto unknown. By mentioning Bhāravi and Dandin as living in the Pallava court, it puts beyond all doubt that Kānchīpuram the capital of the Pallavas was during this age a very important centre in the south for Sanskrit learning and culture. This is independently corroborated by the inscriptional evidence furnished by the Sanskrit charters.

Among Tamil works of the later Pallava period we may mention Perundevanar's Bharatavenba believed to be composed in the ninth century. It is believed The Bharata-Perundevanar originally to have consisted of 12,000 stanzas though only about 800 so far have come down to us. The author of this work is supposed to have lived during the reign of Nandivarman III, the victor in the battle at Tellaru and is also taken to be the one who edited the classical anthologies. In the invocatory verses prefixed to the Udyoga-Parva of the Bharatavenba the author mentions the victory of this king at Tellaru, and we may therefore infer that he was a contemporary of this king and composed his Bharatavenba in the reign of Nandivarman III. As to his having edited the classical anthologies the identification presents great difficulties.

The only Tamil historical piece, as distinguished from religious works of which as we said, there is a Nandikkalam- large quantity that has come down to us from Pallava times, is the poetical work entitled Nandikkalambakam, which in a hundred and ten stanzas commemorates the martial exploits of a certain Pallava king Nandi, probably Nandivarman III. This king, as we shall see, lived in the second quarter of the ninth century. The meagreness of purely Tamil literary enterprise, if we except the Tevaram and Vaishnava Prabandham, probably indicate that the Pallava kings were essentially patrons of Sanskrit learning and Brahmanic culture. The bulk of Tamil literature known as the Sangam works preceded, as we stated above, the advent of the Pallava kings of Kānchīpuram.

Along with these we have the impressions of the Chinese pilgrim and Master of Law—Hiuen-Tsang—

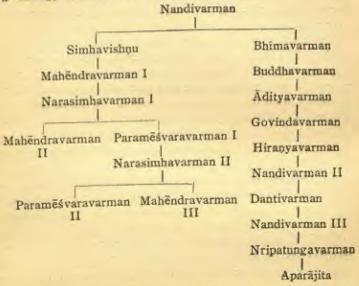

Chinese regarding the city of Kānchī about the year test mony—
Hiuen-Tsang

A.D. 640. His notes furnish a description of contemporary religious and secular life. We have already noticed the historical value of Mahāvamsa for this period of Pallava history.

The Great Pallavas, Simhavishnu Dynasty. Simhavishnuvarman, A.D. 575 to 600 .- The Kaśakkudi plates 1 taken along with the Kuram, and the Velurpalayam give us the following genealogy of the Pallavas of this period :-

The genealogy for this period is full, and there is not the uncertainty of the early Pallava history either about the reigns of this period, or about the order in which the kings succeeded one another as most of the documents give the above order without substantial change. It would be noticed that from the days of Simhavishnu in the third quarter of the sixth century for a period of 125 years the throne remained in the hands of the direct successors of this king. We do not know what position the members of the collateral line, of whom the Kaśakkudi plates mention Bhîmavarman, Buddhavarman, Adityavarman, Govindavarman and Hiranya, occupied. They evidently occupied a subordinate position as the viceroys under these kings. Not until we come to the days of Paramēśvara II in the beginning of the eighth century do we find that a descendent of Bhīma, the younger brother of Simhavishnu, effecting a change of dynasty by succeeding to the Pallava throne.

¹ S.I.I., vol. ii, part 3, pp. 346-53.

[&]quot; Ibid., vol. i, p. 152. 3 Ibid., vol. ii, part 5, p. 508 ff.

No inscription or copper-plate ascribable to this king Simhavishnu has yet been discovered. But his name is perpetuated in the historical introduction to the work already referred to wherein the author says that Bhāravi, one of his predecessors, went to his court by invitation. In the Mattavilāsa-Prahasana, written by his son Mahēndravarman I, he is referred to in the prologue in terms of praise.

As regards his achievements we read in verse 10 of the Vēlūrpālayam grant that his prowess was widely known on earth, that he quickly seized the country of the Cholas, embellished by the daughter of Kavēra, whose ornaments are the forests of paddy-fields, and where are found brilliant groves of areca.² From this we may infer that this king who is called Avanisimha for the first time extended the Pallava territory as far as the delta of the Kaveri. In doing so he had to encounter the individual and united opposition of the southern powers who are referred in the Kaśākkudi plates, among the vanquished: the Kaļabhra, Māļava, Chola, Pāndya and the Simhala proud of the strength of their arms.

That this conquest of the Tamil regions was no mere formal praise drawn from the imagination of the writer of the document is seen in the absence of reference to any similar achievement in the records of his son Mahēndravarman I, and suggest

ेपछ्जकुञ्धरणिमण्डलकुलपर्वतस्य सर्वनयविजितसमस्तसामान्तमण्ड-लस्य आखण्डलसमपराक्रमश्रियः श्रोमहिमानु ६पदानविभूति परिमृत राज-राजस्य श्रोसिंहविष्णुवर्मणः पुत्रः शत्रु षड्वर्गविमहपरः परहित परतन्त्र-तया महाभूत संधर्मी महाराजोः श्रोमहेन्द्र विक्रमवर्मी नाम ।

Mattavilasa, Sthāpanā, p. 3.

^{*} S. I. I., vol. ii, part 5, p. 510.

³ Ibid.

clearly that he must have inherited the region around the Kaveri as part of the ancestral dominions which his father had left him. Of the earlier Pallava kings we know of only one king Buddhavarman who is said to have encountered the Cholas, and who is described in the Vēlūrpālayam plates as being the submarine fire to the ocean-like army of the Cholas. Whether he conquered the region watered by the Kaveri is. however, not known. We may, therefore, take it that the region was for the first time brought under the Pallavas under Simhavishnu.

Our knowledge of the Cholas, the Pandyas, the Kalabhras and the Malavas 1 whom Simhavishnu is said to have defeated is very limited, in the present state of our knowledge.

We do not know who these Malavas were and whether they are identical with the Mājayas of the north. They are probably to be associated with the people of Majanādu who figure in early Tamil literature.

As regards the Kalabhras we find that their history is equally obscure. These people figure also among the kings conquered by the Chāļukya king Vikramāditya and Vinayāditya. They seem to have invaded the Pāndyan capital and having routed the ruling king established their rule. According to the Vēlvikudi plates the Adhirāja was ousted from Power and the country occupied by the Kalabhras. (Tīruvilaiyādal-Purāṇam). Mr. Venkayya relying on the evidence of Periyapunānam where the Karnatakas are said to have invaded and occupied Madura, proposed to identify the Kalabhras with the Karnatakas (Ep. Rep. for 1908, paras 25-26). Mr. T. A. Gopinatha Rao deriving the word Kalabhra from Kalavara tries to identify the Kalabhras with the Muttaraiyar mentioned in the Sen-talai Pillar inscription. (Ep. Ind., 15).

Kalabhras cannot be Karnātakas obviously, as the Chāļukyas themselves must have ruled over Karnāṭaka and therefore over the Karnāṭakas. Kaļabhras must, therefore, be people different from the groups known to us otherwise. There was a people occupying the Pallava territory—the northern part in particular—whose name has hitherto been read as Kalvar in the Sangam works. They had a chief by name Pulli with headquarters at Vengadam (Tirupati). It is these people that are called Kajabbras in a Sanskritized form. Kajvar later Kajjar in Tamil are called Kajamaj in Sanskrit. This seems to indicate a form Kalavar in Tamil which would become Kalabharu in Kannada, Sanskritized into Kalabhra. I am assured by Pandit Mahamahopadyaya Svāminātha Aiyar that the reading of the MSS, is Kalavar and not Kalvar. It is the irruption of these people into the south through the advance of the Pallava dynasty that brought about a great revolution in the Tamil country. The Malavas are a similar ethnic group with almost similar habits. They also occupied the territory on the northern and western border of the Tamil land. Their chiefs took the Tamil title Malavaraiyan which has become Malavarayan which is still a common name in the Tamil country of Kallar families.

Simhavishnu's religious leanings were towards Vaishnavism which his very name suggests. It should, however, be remembered that the Pallava kings of Kanchipuram were some of them devoted to Siva and some to Vishnu as the names of the Pallava kings indicate. Thus for instance, while there are names like Vishnugopa and Kumāravishnu which suggest that the kings who bore such names were devoted to Vishnu, it is a fact that their sons and grandsons bear names like Skandavarman and Paramesvaravarman which indicate their devotion to Siva while names like Buddhavarman possibly indicate the Ruddhistic leanings of this Pallava sovereign. But in the case of Simhavishnu the Udayendiram plates 1 of Nandivarman II clearly call him Bhaktyaradita-Vishnu-Simha-Vishnu in terms which leave no possibility of escape from regarding him as a Vaishpava.2 None of the temples that this sovereign might have constructed for Hindu gods has been discovered as yet, though Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil puts forward the suggestion that the Siyyamangalam cave temple which contains an inscription of Avanibhajana, identified by Hultzsch with Mahendravarman I, might have been excavated by Simhavishnu. 'It may not be impossible,' says he, 'that the Siyyamangalam temple which contains the images of the lion and the inscription of King Avanibhajana belongs to the days of king Simhavishnu (called Avanisimha in the Kaśākkudi plates). It is not impossible, in fact, that the birudas such as Satrumalla, Lalitankura, Avanibhājana were borne also by Mahendra and by his father Simhavishnu.' 3

It is a remarkable fact that no inscription dated in the reign of this sovereign has come down to us although from the later copper-plates and stone inscriptions as well as the recently discovered manuscript Avantisundarikathasara we may be sure that Simhavishnu actually ruled as a king for a period of time. His name moreover figures in the two records which indicate that his kingdom comprised at least the regions where these records are found. Manali, a village near Tiruvorriyūr (not far from Madras), was called in ancient times Simhavishnu-Chaturvēdimangalam. Similarly, No. 265 of 1907 calls Kanjanūr in Kumbhakonam Taluk, Simhavishnu-Chaturvēdimangalam which shows that it must have been so named during the reign of this king. The region from Manali to Kanjanūr where this sovereign should have reigned probably constituted the kingdom. It is possible that the discovery of fresh inscriptions will throw new light on the matter.

The Tamil Malavar changes into Mālavas by falseanalogy in Sanskrit, Malavaraiyan becoming Mālavarāyan even in Tamil at a later period. Ed.

¹ S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 74, 11. 11-12. ² Early History of Vaishnavism in South India, p. 95. ³ Pall. Ant., vol. i, p. 40.

A Relief of Simhavishnu.-One of the most interesting discoveries of the Epigraphy Department in recent years has been the identification of royal sculptures at the Adivarahasvāmi temple at Mahābalipuram.1 These reliefs relate to two kings cut in bas-relief in the Varaha cave in the village of Mahābalipuram and were noticed as early as 1913,2 by Mr. Krishna Sastri in his report although no identification had been then attempted by him. This was due to the failure to notice the inscriptional label that is put over the bas-reliefs which have now been copied and read. From these it is now clear that the representations are those of Simhavishnupötaraya and Mahendravarman I. These kings are here represented with their queens in an attitude of adoration. The Archeological Superintendent's Report for 1922-23 says on page 94, 'No. 661 of 1922, is engraved on the portal of the north niche in the Varaha cave, and consists of the name Sri Simmavinou-Potādhirājan in the Pallava-Grantha characters. The niche below this inscription contains the seated figure of a king with a high crown (kirita), and chest and ear ornaments flanked on either side by a standing female figure representing, by their crowns, his queens . . . No. 662 of 1922 cut on the top of the corresponding niche on the south side of the main cave, and opposite to the image of Simhavishnu referred to above, consists only of the name Śri-Mahēndra-potādhirāja. The niche contains the standing image of a king distinguished by his crown and ornaments. His half-raised hand points towards the shrine of the God evidently—whither he appears to be leading the nearer queen by her right hand. The above two inscriptions serve as labels to show whom the images represent. . . . '

¹ These reliefs and the inscriptions at the Adivaraha temple have been studied by Rao Bahadur H. Krishna Sastri in a recent Memoir issued by the Archaeological Survey of India.

The figures in the interior of this temple are first mentioned in one of the Mackenzie MSS. accounts and in The Cave Temples of India by Fergusson and Burgess (1890) although no identification is attempted.

One explanation of the presence of the image of Simhavishnuvarman in the Ädhivarāha temple at Mahābalipuram may be that the monolith was excavated by him. If this is so it shows that some of the monuments of the Seven-Pagodas are as old as the days of Simhavishnu. This would throw new light on the real age of the monuments of the Seven-Pagodas.

Mahendravarman I. A.D. 600 to 630 .- Mahendravarman. known also as Mahēndravikrama, and by surnames such as Mattavilása, Gunabhara, etc., came to the throne after Simhavishnu about the beginning of the seventh century. His reign is memorable in many respects. In the first place he is believed to have given for the first time a real start to excavating temples out of solid stone. In the second place his reign synchronized with the religious activity of Appar, and the literary efforts of Bharavi in the field of Sanskrit letters. From a purely administrative point of view his government provided the quiet atmosphere for the peaceful pursuit of avocations to his subjects hitherto tormented by wars. From a military point of view his rule witnessed the beginnings of the Pallava-Chālukya and Pallava-Pāndya conflicts which were destined to be continued by his successors for over a century and a half. Considerable impetus was given to productions in the fields of drama, music, painting and other arts.

Hultzsch Insc. of Seven-Pagodas, Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 1,

MAHENDRAVARMAN AND HIS QUEENS

Page 28.

The most powerful contemporary of Mahēndravarman I and his son Narasimhavarman I was Pulakēśin II. The actual causes of the conflict between the Chāļukyas and the Pallava kings lie buried in obscurity. Among the wild guesses made in this direction the most ingenious is that of Mr. Rice who considers that their (Chāļukya) name bears a suggestive resemblance to Seleukia, and that they should be probably associated with Seleucidae¹ in which case the Pallava-Chāļukya conflict would only be a natural sequel to their original warfare on the banks of the Tigris.

It was about the beginning of the seventh century that Pulakēšin II made himself Master of Vengi which till then was under the Pallavas, and established his brother Kubja-Vishnuvardhana as his viceroy. His descendants afterwards became independent making him founder of the Eastern Chāļukya dynasty. It was in the course of his southern wars that Pulakēśin came into conflict with the Pallavas at Kānchipuram. The Aihole inscription 2 which enumerates his exploits says of his encounter with the Pallavas that 'he caused the splendour of the Lord of the Pallavas who had opposed the rise of his power to be obscured by the dust of his army and to vanish behind the walls of Kanchipuram.' This important reference would suggest a defeat and retreat on the part of Mahendravarman I before his Chāļukyan adversary, but we learn however from the Kaśākkudi plates a that Mahendravarman I gained a victory at Pullalur which has been identified by Dr. Hultzsch with Pullalur (Polilore in early British period of Indian history and now Paljur) in the Conjeevaram taluk in the Chingleput District. This was the scene of two other battles between the English and the French in the British period. It is not stated who the enemies of the Pallavas in this victory were. But it is extremely likely that they were no other than the Chalukyas who in a later record described the Pallavas as their ' natural enemies.'

¹ Mys. Gaz., vol. i; also Mys. and Coorg from Ins., p. 62.
2 Ep. Ind., vol. vi, p. 11.
3 S.I.I., vol. ii, part, 3, p. 343.

Religion.—According to tradition Mahēndravarman I was originally a Jain and was given to persecuting the votaries of other religious denominations. In the Periyapuranam account his conversion to Saivism was brought about by Appar otherwise known as Tirunāvukkaraśu. Appar was one of those who is believed to have been thus persecuted, but his wonderfully miraculous powers, especially the manner in which he escaped the tortures to which he was subjected by the Jains, moved the Pallava king to embrace the Saivism of Appar.

This event which may have taken place in the middle of his reign marks an important epoch in the history of Śaivism. There is probably an allusion to this event in the king's life in the Trichinopoly rock inscription 1 which refers to him as having turned back from hostile conduct to the worship of the linga (emblem of Siva). We have at present no means of ascertaining the exact circlimstances connected with this event. It happened presumably sufficiently early in his reign as the number of Siva rock-cut temples excavated by him are numerous and must have taken many years to come into existence. All these cave-temples as they are styled have a peculiarity in shape and have been discovered at Valiam (Chingleput), Mahēndravādi (North Arcot District), Dalavanur (South Arcot District), Siyyamangalam and Pallavaram. He probably originated the habit of inscribing the surnames of the reigning monarchs in the pillars and walls of the various temples that he built. Among the surnames that this king assumed may be mentioned those of Gunabhara, Purushottama, Satyasanda, Avanibhājana, Sankīrnajāti, Vichitrachitta, Narendra, Chetthakari, Aluptakama, Kalabapriyah, Lalitānkura, Satrumalla, etc. Of these the biruda Chetthakāri, if it is really an equivalent with Chaitya-kāri, would indicate the temple-building propensities of the king. This probably has reference to the rock-cut temples of Mahendravarman I, all over the Tamil country. The Telugu birulas such as Nilvilonayambu, Pasarambu, Ventulavittu, etc., occurring in these inscriptions have been taken to indicate the Telugu origin of Mahendravarman's style. It must not be imagined that this sovereign's zeal for Saivism blunted his sympathy for other religious, a feature of his character in pre-Saiva days. Though he may have professed his devotion to Siva he caused to be cut out in rock a Vishau temple called Mahendravishnuggha! on the banks of Mahendra-Tatāka in Mahēndravādi. This inscription records in Pallava-Grantha that Gunabhara caused to be cut out of rock the temple of Makendravishnuggha in Mahendrapura. This place has been identified by Dr. Hultzsch with Mahendravadi, near Arkonam. This catholicity was due to the general tendency of the age when Vishnu and Siva had not begun to have their separate followers and were placed in the same temple without distinction as we find in the monuments of the Pallavas at the Seven-Pagodas and elsewhere. The Mandagappattu inscription of this king for instance records the fact King Vichitrachitta caused to be constructed a temple to Brahma, Isvara and Vishnu without the use bricks, timber, metal and mortar. In other words it was a monolithic rocktemple that was excavated.2

The Mahendra Style.—The principles of the style of architecture adopted and popularized by Mahendravarman I have been studied in full by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Pallava Antiquities and by Mr. A. H. Longhurst of the Archæological Department. According to the former scholar the monuments of Mahendravarman's period discovered hitherto are caves excavated in rocks. The pillars are formed of two cubical

² Ep. Ind., vol iv, p. 1521.

This short record is of importance inasmuch as it records that before the time of Vichitrachitta bricks, timber, metal and mortar were the common temple-building materials. This falsifies the notion that structural temples were non-existent before the seventh century a.p. in South India, a view based on the absence of the remains of any previous to this period. This statement in the Mandagappattu inscription warrants the conclusion that such temples were in existence before.

parts separated by a prismatic part. . . . These caves are all of them situated in Tondamandalam and Tamil land, and are distinguished by (1) Sanctuaries destitute of Somaskanda image, (2) Circular lingams, (3) Dvārapālas of a peculiar posture, (4) Double-arched Tiruvātchi (prabhā toranas), (5) Cubical pillars. All of them are, besides subterranean mandapas. The Archæological Report for 1918-19, Section 26. says: 'A very characteristic feature about the temples in this style is the type of pillar found in them. These are about two feet square in section and seven feet in height. The upper and lower portions are cubical while the middle portion of shaft has the angles levelled off which makes the middle third octagonal in section. Sometimes the cubical portions are decorated with a conventional lotus flower design similar to the lotus medallions appearing on the stone rails of the Amaravati stupa. The capitals of the pillars are simple corbels or brackets supporting the architrave above. . . . Each pillar has a corresponding side pilaster.'

Pallava Painting .- A vestige of Pallava painting has also been discovered in recent times in the Pudukkotta State, at Śittannavāśal. The style of the rock-cut temple at Śittannavāśal is identical with that of Mamandur cave built by Mahendravarman I. This cave temple seems to have been at one time fully painted but the painting on the upper part of the edifice is alone visible now, namely, the painting on the ceiling, the capitals and the upper parts of the pillars. 'The principal subject that is preserved is a grand fresco which adorns the whole extent of the ceiling and the verandah. This fresco represents a tank covered with lotuses. In the midst of the flowers are found fishes, geese, buffaloes, elephants and three men who surely are Jains holding lotuses in their hands. Their pose, their colouring and the sweetness of their countenance are indeed charming. . . . Therefore the decoration of the capitals of the pillars in the facade is well preserved. It consists of lotuses whose blooming stems intertwine with elegance. The two pillars in the passage are adorned with the figures of dancing girls.'1 It is presumable, as Jouveau-Dubreuil suggests that the art of dancing was encouraged by Mahendravarman I who probably wrote a treatise on the subject. The Mamandur inscription2 of this king alludes to the work Dakshinachitra probably a treatise on painting and other works on music composed by him.

The Musical Inscription at Pudukkotta,-To this period is also ascribed the musical inscription at Kudumiyamalai3 in the State of Pudukkotta. The Epigraphy Report for 1906 says that the inscription was engraved at the instance of an unnamed king who was a disciple of a certain Rudracharya who composed the svaras for the benefit of the pupils. Relying on the panegyric given in the Mamandur record, and the reference to Vālmīki of the svaras and varņas of music therein detailed, and to the Mattavilasa-Prahasana, as also the close resemblance between the Kudumiyamalai inscription and the Mahēndravarman inscription at Trichinopoly, scholars4 have concluded that Mahendravarman I was an accomplished musician and that the Kudumiyamalai musical inscription was engraved at his order.

Mahendravarman I as an author. - In the previous paragraphs it was mentioned that the Pallava court in the days of Simhavishnu was a centre of Sanskrit culture. The occurrence of the name of the works Mattavilasa-Prahasana in the Māmandūr inscription indicates that there was in existence at the time, a work bearing that name. No one knew of this work until the Oriental MSS. Department of the Travancore State discovered this work some years ago. It has now been published as one of the Travancore Sanskrit Series by ³ This subject is treated by N. C. Menta in his ' Studies in Indian Painting' where four of the fresco paintings of this temple have been reproduced. Mr. Mehta, however, doubts that the temple is a Jain one. Studies in Indian Painting, pp. 11-12.

Q. J.M.S., vol. xiii, p. 572.

G. Jouveau-Dubreuil, Pallacas, p. 23.

The work was probably modelled on another early Prahasana Rhage.

The work was probably modelled on another early Prahasana Bhagavadajjukam recently published and which is attributed to Bodhayana. The name of this prahasana also occurs in the Mamandur inscription of Mahendravarman 1 in the line preceding the one where Mattavillara is mentioned. (See I.H.Q., vol. i, p. 263, Note 3.)

Mahamahopadyaya Pandit T. Ganapati Sastri. This work is of great value in enabling us to know the nature of religious and secular life led by people during the days of Mahendravarman I, in the first quarter of the seventh century.

The Contents of this Work.—The work describes the drunken revelry of a Kāpālika with a female-companion, his falling out with a hypocritical Śākyabikhshu, believing him to have stolen his Kapāla (alms-bowl) which had been carried away by a dog, his having recourse to a degenerate Pāśupāta for the settlement of the dispute and finally the recovery of the Kapāla from a mad man. We have already seen that the titles Mattavilāsa, Avanibhājana, Šatrumalla and Guṇabhara were borne by Mahēndravarman I and occur in various inscriptions. Of these the title Śatrumalla is mentioned in the concluding lines of the play; and that of Avanibhājana is referred to in the fourth pāda of the mangaļa sloka... and Guṇabhara and Mattavilāsa are also found in the words of Nast in the sthāpana. The virtues of the king are eulogized in the opening portion of this work.

Light thrown on Contemporary Life by the Work.—This little play is full of interest to the student of religious history as it affords valuable material regarding the extinct Kāpālika faith, and the vices of the Śākyabikshus and the views regarding the teachings of the Buddha held by the followers of other religions, such as the Kāpālikas. 'From the Mattavilāsa-Prahasana it becomes clear that to a Kāpālika, the Kapāla is as essential as is a sacred thread to a Brahmana. If he loses it he should provide himself with another in a stated time. He should cover his body with ashes and make himself hideous, and drink liquor from skull of a human being. . . . One of his articles of faith is that the effect always resembles, to a certain extent, the cause; therefore, from the practice of austerities in this life one cannot obtain bliss in another life since austerities and bliss are of opposite nature. The Kāpālikas carried in addition to the Kapāla, a cow's horn both for blowing during their worship and drinking from. The people of this faith associated freely with women-Kāpālikas. . . . The opinions held by the particular Kāpālika, Bhatya-Soma of our play, regarding the Sakyabhikshus are that the Sakyabhikshus indulged freely in animal food and fattened themselves pecuniarily by being the managers of several vihāras, and led a comfortable life, against all the rules of their order: 'they covered themselves only to conceal their foibles. Their teacher Buddha, did nothing more than steal his doctrines from the Vēdanta and the Mahābhārata of the Brahmans, and compiled therefrom his doctrines.'1 The mention of Buddhas, Bikshus, Kāpālikas and Pāśupatas, in his burlesque by Mahēndravarman I as among the inhabitants of Kanchipuram bear out the surmise that Buddhism flourished there till at least the seventh century A.D., and that the statement of Hiuen-Tsang regarding the existence in Kanchipura of a large number of vihāras2 finds support in this work of Mahēndravarman.

प्रज्ञादानदयानुभावधृतयः कान्तिः कलाकीशलं सत्यं शीर्यसमायता विनय इल्वेबभ्प्रकारागुणाः । अप्राप्त स्थितयः समेत्य शरणं याता यमेकं कली कल्पान्ते जगदादिमादिपुद्दषं सर्गप्रभेदा इव ॥ Mattavilasa, p.3. T. Sans, Ser., No. LV.

The reign of Mahendravarman I synchronized with the period of decay of Buddhist and Jain religions at Kanchipuram and the Tamil land. The Saiva saints Appar, and Tirugñāna-Sambandar were actually engaged in propagating the Saiva faith. According to the testimony of these saints, as represented in their references to the Sakyas, we have to infer that the Buddhists and Jains of this period were in a degenerate position then. They are mentioned in the same strain also in several verses in the Vaishnava work Nalayiraprabhandam.3

Spent Swiniant. Nan. Tiru, v. 6.

² Beal's Rec., vol. ii, p. 229, 1 M.C.C. Mag., vol. 34, p. 413. ் பிவழக்கில் புத்தொண்ணவெல் slavpasppassyl scale Ces, Cattlesgeb. Tirumalai, p. 7. Candidari Curfouri varfait agalary stragets, P. T. vol. ix, p. 7. v. 8. afurisampuljati umjat

The reign of Mahēndravarman I is believed to have been the period of the Vaishnava saint Tirumaliśai and therefore also that of the first three Ālvārs by certain scholars. Mr. M. Srinivasa Aiyangar in his Tamil Studies expresses the view that the Guṇabhara mentioned in the Nānmugan-Tiruvandādi is a reference to Mahēndravarman I, and concludes, on this basis alone, that he was his contemporary. But a careful examination of the context and meaning of this stanza² shows that the Guṇabhara of the Ālvār cannot be interpreted as alluding to any mortal man.

Tamil Studies, pp. 305-6.
 காப்பு மறக்கும் வக்களையே மென்ற்கும்பன் ஆப்புதம் பெறும் பல்தும் கூட்ட ஆக்கை மேல்றும் நடியில் பிறும் பெறும் பிறும் பிறும் பிறும் மூற்கும் கூட்ட கூட்ட இது வேறியில் பிறும் பிறும

CHAPTER VII

NARASIMHAVARMAN I (MAHAMALLA) A.D. 630-660

Narasimhavarman I on the Pallava throne about a.d. 630. He is called in some of his inscriptions, Vātāpi-Konda-Narasimhavarman and this alludes to his supreme achievement, namely, the capture and destruction of Vātāpi (Badami in the Bijapur District). He is one of the most remarkable sovereigns of the line of Simhavishnu, and the Pallava empire must have been considerably enlarged during his reign. His reign is well-known for the following:—(1) Invasion and capture of Vātāpi; (2) Invasion of Ceylon; (3) The excavation works at Māmallapuram; (4) The visit of the Chinese pilgrim to Kānchīpuram.

The Chalukya-Pallava Relations .- It has already been seen that in about the middle and closing years of his father, Pulakesin II advanced as far as the city of Kanchi, forcing 'the lord of the Pallavas to retreat behind the walls of Kanchipuram.'1 The Kūram plates 2 belonging to the reign of Paramēśvaravarman I mention the important fact that Narasimhavarman I inflicted a crushing defeat on Pulakesin, in the battles of Pariyala, Manimangala and Śūramāra. The exact locality corresponding to these places cannot, at this distance of time, be made out except in the case of Manimangala which may be safely identified with the modern village of Manimangalam, situated at a distance of only twenty miles from Kanchi. This reference in the Kūram plates indicates another Châlukya invasion early in Narasimhavarman's reign on which occasion the Chalukya army would appear to have advanced very near the Pallava capital itself before it sustained the defeat mentioned in the record.

Raid on Valapi .- Shortly after the repulse of the Chāļukya armies from the neighbourhood of Kanchipuram, Narasimhavarman I made serious preparations for a counter-invasion into the Chāļukya territory. This expedition was entrusted to the command of Sign-Tonda who was known otherwise as Paranjoti. That this aggressive expedition under the command of Siru-Tonda marched against the Chāļukya capital, captured it and returned with great spoils to Kānchi is learnt from the life of Paranjöti, 1 otherwise Siru-Tondar in the Periyapuranam. The Vēlūrpālayam plates refer to this exploit:- From his son Mahendra was born Narasimbavarman I famous like Upendra (Vishņu) who, defeating the host of his enemies took from them the pillar of victory standing in the centre of Vātāpi.'2 This is also referred to in a mutilated inscription found at Vătāpi3 and written in characters of this period, probably put up by Narasimha to commemorate his capture of the city. This record, although mutilated, contains the surname Mahamalia, and the words Kshitibhujam-agresara Pallava and (Nara) simha-vishnu. From these it is clear that Narasimhavarman I captured the city of Vātāpi; and probably set up a pillar of victory at this place recording this achievement. There can, therefore, be no doubt regarding the capture of the city by the Pallava king.

Ceylon Invasion.—The circumstances that led to the intervention of Narasimhavarman I in the affairs of Ceylon are gathered chiefly from the Mahāvamśa.* It appears from this account that Mānavamma, a Ceylon prince, having become an exile fled to India, and, arriving at the city of Kānchīpuram, managed to enter service under Narasimhavarman I with a view to secure his aid and ultimately to gain the Ceylon throne.

[்] வள்ளவிக்குத் தண்டுபேல் வடபுவத்து வரசுவித் தொள்ளவும் துவரசுத் துள்ளுகிக்கை வரையுக்கத்துப் பன்னனியு சிதிக்குளையும் பசட்டினரும் பசித்தொகையும் இல்னைவெண்ணவேகளும் கிவரசன் முன்கோணக்குச்சு

Per. Pur., Life of Paranjoti, v. 6.

S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 508, verse 11.
 Ind. Ant., vol. ix, p. 199.
 The Mahāvaihša, ch. 47 (Turnour's translation).

Here he is described as having constantly engaged himself in service of the king and proved his trustworthiness by many an act of bravery and lovalty. The Mahavamsa mentions in great detail the various acts of Manavamina, particularly his services to Narasimhavarman I in his wars against the Vallabha, the Chalukva king: how once king Vallabha came to make war against Narasimha and how the Pallava king with a view to test Manayamma left him at his capital city and proceeded to the battle-field alone, and how Manavamma's affection caused him to leave the safety of the fortified capital and join his king in the field of battle in victory, defeat, or death. Such action was bound to increase Narasimha's esteem for him, and it is therefore not surprising that when the Ceylon prince prepared to go back to his country Narasimhavarman I gave him a strong escort and an army with which he was able to secure the Cevlon throne. But this success did not last long. Soon after, his army deserted him and the Prince of Ceylon came back once more to seek the help of Narasimbayarman I. Again Narasimbayarman I gave him an army much bigger than before, and this time the Pallava king himself accompanied his troops as far as the harbour where his men went on board on their voyage to the shores of Ceylon. It is noteworthy that this naval expedition of Narasimhavarman I set sail from the ancient Pallava port, Mahābalipuram, which, according to contemporary account was a harbour at this time. It is worthy of note that Hiuen-Tsang1 who stayed in the city for a considerable time (circa 642) recorded the fact that ships go to Ceylon from Kanchi, and that it extended by twenty miles to the coast.2 Tirumangai Alvar also records that Mahabalipuram was a busy port in his hymns on this place and particularly notes that in its harbour ride at anchor 'vessels bent

Beal, Records, vol. ii, p. 228.

நம்மிகோல் கிறிக்குளைப்படு புறைக்கைகளாகத்தினரும் எல்கிகோல் சமைனிக்குள் வழக் சக்கிறக்கும் என் பெருசிக்கு கமக்களியக்கும் வகில்ச்சடன் வகில்ந்தவச்பனம் வலக்கொள் வளத்தார்களை வலக்கொள்ளன்படுகற்கோக் to the point of breaking laden as they are with wealth, big trunked elephants and nine gems in heaps.'

This second naval expedition was a complete success and must have made a profound impression on the contemporary powers of South India.1 The Kaśäkkudi plates which confirm the conquest of Ceylon justly compare this achievement of Narasimhavarman I with that of Rama's conquest of Lanka." Prince Manayamma was firmly placed on the throne, and not until Narasimhavarman I's death did trouble overtake him again.

Monuments of Narasimhavarman I. Improvement of Mahābaliburam.-Like his father, Narasimhavarman I was a lover of building temples all over his kingdom. Some of his earlier monuments such as the cave temples at Trichinopoly district and Pudukotta were excavated from out of rocks as those of Mahendravarman I. The peculiar features of the monuments of Narasimhavarman have been described by A. H. Longhurst as follows :- 'The cave temples are excavated in the face of the rock in the same manner as those belonging to the earlier period, but their facades are usually more ornamental and contain pillars of a different variety. On plan the interiors are much the same as those of the cave temples of the Mahendra style, with similar small square shrine chambers cut in the back wall which are usually free from ornament within. The pillaredhall in front of the shrine often contains large panels cut in the side walls filled with sculptural figures in high relief. These are usually of great beauty and executed with remarkable skill. The interior too of the more ornamental cave temples is provided with corpice and plinth mouldings.

^{1 &#}x27;It is certainly astonishing that in the inscriptions of the Pallavas and other Southern dynasties no reference whatever is made to the relations which in those days must have existed between Coromandel and tions which in those days must have existed between Coromanuer and the Far Bast. The explanation probably is that those relations, of which the accounts of the Chinese pilgrims have left us such a valuable record were of a perfectly peaceful nature. Suppose the powerful Pallava princes of Käächipura had equipped armadas and carried their arms to the remote shares of Campa and Java, may we not assume that their conquests on the far side of the ocean would have been extolled in their prayastis with no less effusion than we find lavished on their victories. over the Chalukyas? '- J. Ph. Vogel-The Yung Inscriptions of King Mulavarman. * S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 343, verse 22.

The most striking feature about the Māmalla style is the curious shape of the pillars.1 The square heavy pillars with corbel-capitals of the earlier period are replaced by pillars of a more elegant shape and better proportion. The base of the pillar is carved in the shape of a conventional lion sitting very erect and carrying the shaft of the column on the top of its head. This shaft is still octogonal in section but of better proportion and crowned with a bulbous capital having a flat abacus. Between the capital and the architrave is usually a double-bracket supporting the cornice. This latter feature is obviously a stone copy of a wooden-model.' ?

According to Mr. Longhurst examples of Māmalla style are only found at the Seven Pagodas. 'It will be remembered,' says he, 'that it was Māmalla who founded Māmallapuram naming the town after himself.3 Although most of the monuments there may be said to be in the Mamalla style it is quite certain that all of them could not possibly have been excavated during his life time, as the work must have taken over a century and even then was never finished. Therefore we may presume that Mämalla's son and successor Mahendravarman II and also the latter's son Paramesvaravarman I, carried on the work begun by Mamalla keeping more or less to the original style. . . .

Dr. Hultzsch on the age of the Seven Pagodus .- About the exact age of the monuments of the Seven Pagodas the views of scholars differ considerably. According to Venkayyas

² Arch. Report for 1918-1919, p. 26 ff. Also see same writer's remarks in Pallava Architecture, Part 1, Memoirs of the Arch. Surv. India, No. 17,

In the opinion of the late James Fergusson derived from a study of the sculptures and the architecture the date of the Seven Pagodas is somewhat earlier than 700, but their execution may have been spread over half a century or even more and that a.D. 650 or 700 may be safely relied upon as the date at which the rocks were carved into the wondrons forms which excite our admiration. Cave Temples of India, p. 110.

^{*} A.S.R., 1906-7, p. 234.

Mahabalipuram was founded by Narasimhavarman I, surnamed Mahamalia,1 after his own surname and that the earliest of them cut out by him.

The place is ordinarily supposed by most official Epigraphists and Western archæologists to have had no previous history2 or existence although the mention of this place by the earliest Alvars and the recent discovery of inscribed statues of Simhavishnu and his son Mahendravarman I clearly goes against such a presumption. According to Dr. Huitzsch the majority of short epigraphs on the monolith now styled Dharmarája Ratha resemble those of the Mahendravadi and Siyyamang alam cave inscriptions of the Pallava king Mahendravarman. Among the names and surnames of the king who excavated the Dharmaraja Ratha, we find twice the name of Narasimha which seems to have been his actual name while the remaining designations look like mere surnames. Among the successors of Mahendravarman I there are two kings named Narasimhavarman. As the type of the alphabet is more archaic than that of the second of the inscriptions which probably belongs to Paramēšvaravarman I, father of Rājasimha, Narasimhavarman of Dharmarāja Ratha inscriptions may be identified with Narasimhavarman I, the son of Mahendravarman I. This identification is rendered almost certain by a reference to the published facsimile 3

About the year A.D. 642, the celebrated Chinese pilgrim and Master of Law, Hiuen-Tsang, visited the Pallava capital and appears to have stayed there a considerable time. He described the country round the capital by the name of Dravida, and extending about 6000 ti in extent. The soil was fertile and produced abundance of crops. He found the climate of the Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 1 ff.

Note by Editor on the age of Mahabalipur, Note by Editor on the age of Manahampur.

According to Jouveau-Dubreuil the monuments at the Seven Pagodas do not go back prior to the seventh century, A.D. see his Archaéologie du sud de L'Inde, tome I, pp. 74-102. His theories on the age and the evolution of Pallava monuments are generally followed by A. H. Longhurst, V. A. Smith and Ananda C. Coomaraswamy in his recent work on the History of Indian and Indonesian Art. (pp. 102-104.)

region hot, and the character of the people courageous. The people were deeply attached to the principles of truth and highly esteemed for their learning a fact which is also noted by one of the Tevaram hymnists.2

As regards Buddhism the pilgrim found some hundred Sangharamas, and 10,000 priests all of whom studied the teaching of the Sthavira school of Mahayana Buddhism. The Hindu, including the Jaina temples numbered about eighty and in other parts around he found that the sect of the Digambaras had many adherents. Hiuen-Tsang also refers to the tradition current then that the Tathagatha in olden times when he lived in this world frequented this part very much and converted many men. Therefore Asoka the Buddhist emperor is believed to have built a large number of stapas here traces of which the pilgrim was able to notice in many places around Kanchi. The Chinese pilgrim also refers to the tradition that Kanchipuram was the birth place of Dharmapala, the well-known metaphysician who preceded Silabhadra as head of the great University of Nalanda. The pilgrim also visited Molo-kiu-chi (the Pandva country) where he found some of the inhabitants following the true doctrine, but others impetuous and wholly given to commercial gain. The Buddhist pilgrim also found that in the Pandya country his religion was in a state of decay though traces of monasteries were found everywhere.3

Mahēndravarman II.—About A.D. 655, Narasimhavarman I, the Mahāmalla, died having raised the Pallava power to a glory unprecedented in Pallava history. The exact period of the duration of Narasimha's reign is not known, but from the evidence of the Mahāvamśa, and the prolonged stay of Mānavamma at the court of this king as well as the military and naval enterprises associated with his reign, his reign must have lasted a fairly long time. He was succeeded by Mahēndravarman II about

¹ Beal, Records, vol. ii, p. 228.
2 sudGv surdwig signorus — Appar, Tevāram, Tirukachchimērraļi Patikam, verse 8.
3 Beal, Records, vol. ii, pp. 228-30.

whom practically nothing is known, except the reference in the Kuram plates that he 'thoroughly enforced the sacred law of the castes and the orders.'1 This probably indicates a peaceful reign free from disturbances of hostile invasions from outside. According to Mr. M. S. Ramaswami Aiyangar, Mahendravarman II was the contemporary of Appar. But there is no evidence to show that Mahendravarman II was a Jain in the earlier part of his reign and that his conversion to Saivaism was brought about by Appar. On the other hand, as we saw already, Appar was a contemporary of Mahendravarman I, the son and successor of Simhavishnu (A.D. 600-630).

Paramesvaravarman I (circa 600 to 680).-With the accession of Paramëśvaravarman I we once again find ourselves in very stirring times. Invasions and counter-invasions of the Pallavas and the Chālukyas become once more the order of the day. His great Chālukyan contemporary was Vikramāditya I who, according to the Gadval plates, s conquered Kanchi, defeated Iśvarapotarāja and destroyed the Mahāmalla family. This grant also gives the very important particular that at the time of the southern invasion, Vikramāditya I was encamped at Uragapura4 on the southern bank of the Kaveri. These plates furnish the details of date, i.e. the year both of genealogical list. 1010., S.1.1., vol. li.

¹ The Vēlūrpāļayam plates omit his name altogether from the genealogical list. Ibid., S.I.I., vol. ii.

Studies in South Indian Jainism, p. 66.

Ep. Ind., vol. x, No. 22, pp. 100-6.

As regards the identification of Uragapuram the statement in the plates that it was on the southern bank of the Kaveri makes it clear that plates that it was on the southern bank of the Kaveri makes it clear that it must have been the ancient Chôla capital Uraiyūr near Trichinopoly. Dr. Hultzsch was inclined to identify it with Nagapatam taking Uragapura to be a literal translation in Sanskrit of the Tamil word Naga-Pattinam. (Ep. Ind., vol x, p. 102.) Attempts have been made to identify it with Pāmbūr. But the fact that Peruvajanallūr, where a battle was fought between the Pallavas and the Chalukyas, lies about twelve miles from Trichinopoly (north-west) shows the camp where Vikramāditya stayed and made this grant could not have been very much farther According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil (Pallavas, p. 43) Uragapuram is the 'City of Ranarasika,' of the Kailāsanātha temple inscription (S.I.I., vol. 1, p. 13). But it seems more sound to regard that Paramēšvaravarman I led another invasion against Badami, and that the Kailāsanātha temple inscription has reference to this achievement.

the reign and of the Saka era. The actual date of the grant as given in the record is the full-moon tithi of Vaisakha in the twentieth year of the reign, which was current after 596 Saka years had passed. According to Dr. Fleet the equivalent may be taken as Tuesday, 25th April, A.D. 674, which fully confirms the correctness of other dates obtained for the reign by Prof. Kielhorn.

The details of the Pallava-Chālukya campaign are not clearly known from any records, but it is certain that success did not uniformly attend on the Chalukya invader. The Kuram record already referred to, which belongs to this period, after giving an elaborate account of the martial exploits of Paramēśvaravarman I mentions in particular the fact that he made Vikramaditva ' whose army consisted of several lakshas take to flight covered only by a rag.'1 Similarly the Velurpalayam record2 makes pointed reference to Paramesvaravarman having crushed the conceit of his enemies like the sun destroying the mists. Neither of these grants furnishes any detail which might help us to locate the exact place where the Pallava and the Chalukvan forces met in battle. This very important detail is obtained from the Udayendiram plates3 which mention the name of the site of battle as Peruvalanallur which we may correctly identify with the village of Peruvalanallur in the Lalgudi taluk of the Trichinopoly District. As we know that the Gadval plates mention the important detail that the Chālukya emperor was encamped in Uragapuram, this identification receives added confirmation, especially as this place lies a few miles from this village. The campaign between the Pallavas and the Cholas must have been therefore conducted in and around the town of Trichinopoly. A glowing description of the battle is given in the Küram plates from which we learn that Paramesvaravarman's war-elephant was called Arivarana and that his horse was known as Atiśaya.4

S.I. I., vol. i, p. 144.

v. 11, Vēlūrpāļayam plates, ibid., vol. ii, p. 508.

^{*} Ibid., vol. ii, p. 371.

^{*} At the head of a battle, -in which the disk of the sun was caused to assume the likeness of the circle of the moon through the mist of the

This king appears to have been a great devotee of Siva and pleased that God by constructing large numbers of Siva temples all over the kingdom. From the inscription on the Ganesa temple at Māmallapuram, 1 Dr. Hultzsch has concluded that Atyantakāma after whom the temple is named must have been a surname of Paramesvaravarman I himself dust, there was produced by the marching of the countless troops of men, horses and elephants, which was terrible through the thunderlike sound of drums, which teemed with unsheathed swords that resembled flashes of lightning, in which elephants were moving like clouds, and which therefore resembled an unseasonable appearance of the rainy season; in which tall horses looked like billows, in which elephants caused distress on their path, just as sea-monsters produce whirlpools, in which conches were incessantly blown and which therefore resembled the gaping ocean; which was full of swords and shields, just as of thinoceros. creepers and varana trees, which was crowded with heroes who possessed bows and mighty elephants, as if it were crowded with Sara (grass) and which was agitated by a violent wind in which the path of the wind was obstructed by arrows, that flew past each other on the bows, while these were beat by the warriors; in which javelins, pikes, darts, clubs, lances, spears, and discuses were flying about; in which troops of furious elephants firmly impaled each other's faces with the piercing thunderbolts of their tasks; in which squadrons of horsemen were connected by their swords, that had struck each other's heads, in which there were soldiers who were noted for their dexterity in fighting with sword against sword, pulling of hair against hair and club against club; in which the ground was thickly smeared with saffron as the blood was mixed with copious rutting juice of the elephants that issued in consequence of their considering each other as equals, or despising each other; in which both large armies had lost and dropped arms, necks, shanks, thigh bones and teeth; in which, owing to the encounter of the armies, both sides were broken, urged on, put to flight and prostrated on the ground; which was attended by the goddess of fortune sitting on the swing of the doubt about mutual victory or defeat; in which brave warriors were marching on the back of lines of, fallen elephants, that formed a bridge over the flood of blood, in which soldiers stood motionless, if their blows did not hit each other's weak parts; which was covered here and there with shattered banners and parasols with fallen elephants and with dead and half dead soldiers who had done their duty whose strong arms still raised the weapon whose lips were bitten and whose eyes were deep red with fury; in which a multitude of white chamaras was waving; in which tlaras, armlets, necklaces, bracelets and ear-rings were broken, crushed and pulverised, in which the kashmandas, rakshasas and piśachas were singing, intoxicated with drinking the liquor of the blood; and which contains hundreds of headless trunks, that were vehemently dancing together in a fearful manner according to the beaten time he, unaided, made Vikramāditya, whose army consisted of several lakshas take to flight, covered only by a rag.' (Kūram plates; Dr. Hultzsch's Translation, S.l.l., vol. i, p. 153 ff.)

2 Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 8.

'The second and very florid alphabet found in the inscriptions of the Pallava king Atyantakama on the monolith now styled Ganesa temple (No. 20), in the two caves called Dharmarājamandapa and Rāmānujamandapa. The same alphabet is employed in the Kanchi inscriptions of Rajasimha and his son Mahendravarman III. The Känchipuram inscriptions state that Rajasimha was the son of Ugradanda the destroyer of Ranarasika's city and that the epithet Ranarāsika refers to the Western Chāļukya king Vikramāditya I (A.D. 655-680). The alphabet of the Atyantakāma's inscription at the Seven Pagodas resembles so closely that of Kailasanatha temple epigraphs that both must be assigned to the same period. That Atvantakāma's actual name was Paramēśvara is seen from verse 2 of No. 20." I propose to identify this Atyantakama with either Paramesvaravarman I, the father of Rajasimha or Paramēśvaravarman II, the son of Rājasimha preferably with the former."

It thus appears that the rock-cut monument known as the Ganesa temple as well as the Ramanujamandapa were probably excavated at the orders of Paramesvaravarman and that the former one was a Siva temple. From the eleven slokas in the Ganēśa temple inscription we learn that Paramēśvaravarman I had Chitramāya, Guņabhājana, Śrībhara and Ranajaya as surnames. Vidvavinita Pallava was another title of Paramesvaravarman I. In the village of Küram Paramēśvaravarman appears to have built a structural temple to Siva, called in the plates Vidyāvinīta-Pallava-Paramēśvaragrha. The object of the Kūram grant is a gift of the village of Paramēśvaramangalam (evidently named after the king) made to the temple of Šiva which had been built at Kūram by Vidyāvinīta Pallava. The village was probably named after the king himself and divided into twenty-five parts of which three were to be enjoyed by two Brahmans Anantaśivāchārya and Pullaśarman who looked after the divine service of the temple. The fourth part was set aside for the providing of water and fire for the temple mandapa, the fifth for the reading of the Bharata at this place while the remaining twenty parts were given to twenty Chaturvedins. Kūram is described here as belonging to Mānyavantrarāshtra of Nīrveļūr, a division of Urrukattukottam.

0

Narasimhavarman II—Rājasimha, circa 680-700.—Narasimhavarman II succeeded his father towards the close of the seventh century. His reign appears to have been completely peaceful and free from foreign invasions. Among the temples built by his king may be mentioned the Kailāsanātha temple, called the Rājasimhēšvara after his surname Rājasimha, the Airāvatēšvara temple at Kāūchi, the Shore-temple near the sea at Mahābalipuram, and the Panamalai temple all of which contain his inscriptions. The habit of registering the surnames of the ruling king begun by Mahēndravarman I appears to have become exceedingly popular now and was extensively put into practice by Rājasimha more than 250 of his birudas being found in the walls of the Kailāsanātha temple alone, a Ibid., p. 23.

Some of these are:—'Rishabalānchana', 'Śrī-Śankara-bhakta', 'Śrīvādyavidyādhara', 'Śrī-Āgamapriya', 'Śrī-Pratimalla', 'Śiva-Chūḍāmaṇi', etc. These titles are suggestive of his personal tastes, his accomplishments and religious inclinations. The inscriptions of the Kailāsanātha temple besides the birudas of this king, include those of his son Mahēndravarman III and his queen Rangapatāka whose names are associated with the erection of a part of the temple.² This Rangapatāka appears to have been one of Rājasimha's queens and her record consists of three Sanskrit verses in characters similar to Rājasimha's inscription. This inscription registers the fact that the small Śiva shrine was constructed by Rangapatāka³ the Queen of Narasimhavishņu, or Kālakāla whose sign was the bull.

देवे जगद्वरुपक्षणबद्धदोक्षे निर्विभेन्नशनुद्धदये नरसिंहविष्णौ ॥ बाह्यस्य मूर्जितमवारप्य विराजतेया निर्जित्य गर्व्वमिन पुष्करदेवतायाः • Ibid.

निम्मीपितमिदन्धाम तथा चन्द्रशिखामणेः । प्रताक्येव नारीणां सम्यं रंगप्रताक्या ॥

¹ S.I.I., vol. i, Nos. 25 and 26, pp. 14-18.

The Monuments of Rajasimha .- The most important among the temples now existing, built by Rājasimha is that at Kānchīpuram known as the Kailasanatha temple. One of the inscriptions in this temple records the construction of this temple by Rajasimha. There is a story in the Periyapuranam account of Pūśalār Nāvanār 1 which mentions that a Kādava king built a temple to Siva and heard a celestial voice directing the postponement of the consecration by a day as on the day appointed he had to be present at the temple of the devotee Pūśalar for a This presumably has a reterence to similar function. that erected by Rājasimha as it is mentioned that Rājasimha heard a celestial voice in one of the inscriptions the Kailasanatha temple in itself.2 The construction this temple is also referred to in the Velurpalayam plates in the following terms: - Verse 13 'His (Paramesvaravarman's) son's son was Narasimhayarman II who equal to Mahendra once again organized the ghatika of the twice-born and built of stone a house for the moon-crested Siva which was comparable to the Mountain Kailasa. Among the other temples built during this period we may mention the Siva temple at Panamalai, the Shore-temple at Seven Pagodas and the Airāvatēśvara temple at Kānchīpuram, It has been doubted in some quarters whether or not the Shore-temple at Mahābalipuram is a Pallava structure. Recently about six Sanskrit verses in Pallava script have been discovered round the plinths of the two balipithas here. The record is not complete but contains an eulogy of a Pallava king whose surnames were Atyantakāma, Aparājita, Šivachūdāmani.

¹ காடவர் கோவரன் சசிக்கற்றார் பெரித்தமுற்ற வாடகர்கு சிவனுக்கர்க் பெருற்றெல்லம் வருத்தல்செய்வர ஆடபர்வற்பாதர்காரத் தாரிக்கு என்னுன் முன்னும் வடவர் கொண்றைவேற்றா சாவிடைக் கண்டுவைற்றி

derpyt yrodu Geograf eelinky Gris serpt Louisy strand ygGartik Greeku Griburke Gurghyder GarkarGuey Grekogart serwintGrekut Grekkfaren LynGursyn.

⁻ Per. Pur. Püs. Näy. v. 9 and 10.

etc., attributes that we now know belonged to Rajasimha. Another verse refers to him as Rājasimha, Ranajaya, Śrībhara and Chitrakarmukha and is identical with verse 12 of the Kanchipuram inscription of Rajasimha. The mention in the record of the king as the ruling sovereign makes it almost certain that he was Rājasimha, son of Paramēšvaravarmar. I. who bore the surnames Kshatriyasimha and Rājasimha. The two Siva temples of the Shore-temple Khatriyasimha. Pallavēšvaram and Rājasimhapallavēšvaram were apparently contemporary with Rajasimhapallaveśvaram of Kanchipuram, and have been named after Rajasimha I.1

Literature and Literary Patronage. - The age of Narasimhavarman II was one of intense literary activity. It has been already pointed out that Sanskrit poets and Sanskrit culture were specially patronized by Pallava kings.2 It is suggested that Dandin, the well-known Sanskrit writer, probably flourished for some time in the Pallava court at Kānchipuram, and references to Kanchipura and its rules bave been discovered in his works. In his Kavyadarsa3 Dandin mentions a Saiva king Rajavarma who judging from the way in which he is spoken of must be regarded as his contemporary and probably was Rājasimha Pallava who according to his inscriptions is known to have been a very devout Saiva.4 Prof. M. Rangachariar has also quoted a tradition with reference to chapter v of Kavyadarsas that it was composed by Dandin for giving lessons in rhetoric to a royal prince at Kanchipuram who in all probability was

¹ Mad. Ep. Coll., 566 of 1912. Also see Antiquities of Mahābalipuram, Ind. Ant. for 1917, p. 49 ff.

² In the Vēlūrpāļayam plates Rājaslmha is recorded to have revived the ghalika of the twice-born. The nature of learning acquired at the Brahminical ghafika is described in the Kaśākkudi plates II. 71 ff (S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 358).

Ch li, p. 279.

^{*} Teshamvanhseprasülät-Ranarasikapurön-mardhanat Ugradandat Subramanyakumāro Guha iva Paramādīšvarādāttajanmā. Saktikshunnärivarggöviditabahunayas Saivasidáhantamärggö Srimanatyantakamah kshata Sakatamaté dhurdharah Patlavanam. S.1.1., vol. i, No. 24, 5, 6.

⁵ Ind. Ant., 1912, p. 90 ff.

Rājasimha's son. All these references, taken along with the passage in Kāvyādarša where Dandin illustrates a particular form of composition by a couplet which refers to the city of Kānchi³ and its rulers the Pallavas and the evidence furnished by the recently-discovered Avantisundarikathā, make it clear that Dandin lived for a considerable period at the Pallava court in Kānchīpuram.

Whether the series of dramas published at Trivandrum as Bhāṣa's, were really composed during the reign of Rājasimha it is not possible to say. But certain scholars hold that Svapnavāsavadatta and other works of the series were abridged editions of the works of Bhāṣa prepared for the staging of them before the court of a Pallava king, presumably Rājasimha from the colophons of these plays. These plays bear a close resemblance to Matlavilāsaprahasana of Mahēndravarman I. The evidence available seems to favour the view that the Pallava rather than the Pāndya court was responsible for the production of these plays, if these are not Bhāṣa's own.

Paramēšvaravarman II, A.D. 700-710.—About the close of the first decade of the eighth century Rājasimha was succeeded on the Pallava throne by Paramēšvaravarman II. The reign of this sovereign appears to have been shortlived. The Virattānēšvara temple inscription of this king is dated in the third year of his reign. The Kašākkudi plates record of him that he 'conquered the coquetish ways of the Kali age, that he led the way of policy, which had been prescribed by Dhishana (Bṛhaspati) and that he protected the worlds.' 4

¹ It is Rājasimha himself that appears to have been Ācharya Dandin's pupil from the ślokas under reference if the altered reading proves to be correct. Ed.

^{*} Kav. Dar., ch. 3, p. 114.
* Nāsikyamadyā paritah chaturvarņavibhūshità.

Nasikyamadyaparitah chaturvarnavibhūshila. Astikāchitpuriyasyām-askļavarnāhvayonrpāh. Kav., iii, 144.

In commenting on this well-known enigms in Dandin's work Tarunavächaspati explains it as meaning Känchi ruled over by Pallava kings. (Age of Dandin, Ind. Ant. for 1912, p. 91).

^{*} Verse 26, S.I.I., vol. il, No. 73, p. 357.

112 History of the Pallavas of South India

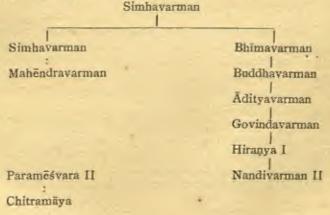

In the Vēlūrpāļayam plates he is described as the chastiser of the Kali and that he governed according to the laws of Manu. As we have no inscription dated in the years subsequent to his third regnal year we may presume that his reign was very short.

1 Verse 14, S.I.I., vol. ii, part v, p. 511.

CHAPTER VIII

DYNASTIC REVOLUTION. HIRANYAVARMAN AND HIS SUCCESSOR PALLAVAMALLA HIRANYAVARMAN I

THE Kaśākkudi plates of Nandivarman Pallavamalla pass on from Paramesvaravarman II to Nandivarman, the descendant of Bhimayarman, thereby suggesting that the Pallava throne passed into the hands of Nandivarman II immediately after Paramesvaravarman II. The circumstances that led to a change in the family are not stated. According to the Udayendiram plates it appears that Parameśvaravarman II left a young prince called Chitramaya whose cause was espoused by the Dramila princes. The recently-discovered Korrangudi plates dated in the sixty-first year of Nandivarman II Pallavamalla, mention after Virakurcha and others one Hiranyayarman who is said to have ruled as king. The Vēlūrpālayam plates do not mention this fact. But the Tandantôttam plates 1 record of him that he was born for the good of the world and that he made his enemies settle in forests and was the asylum of those who eagerly desired protection. His place in the Pallava family may be indicated in the following table :-

¹ Tandantöttam plates, v. 1, S.I.I., vol ii, part 5, p. 528.

Sculptures in the Vaikunthaperumal Temple at Kanchi.-The sculptures inside the Vaikunthaperumāl temple at Kānchīpuram throw some light upon the history of this period. The original sculptures were considerably mutilated, but the temple authorities have tried to repair them with brick and mortar. The explanatory notes have not been filled in completely but are found on a small portion of the south verandah and explain thirteen compartments of the upper row of sculptures. The first of these notes refers to the death of Paramesvaravarman of the Pallava family which was descended from the God Brahma and mentions the ministers, the Ghatikaiyar, the Mulaprakrti and Hiranyayarma Mahārāja. It is partially damaged but ends with the word 'place'. The second compartment ends with the words enru sonna idam, 'the place where he said that'. The fourth mentions Śrīmalla, Ranamalla, Sangramamalla, and Pallavamalla as Hiranvavarma's four sons and ends with the words ' Paramesvaran nan poven enru toluduninra idam', 'the place where Parameśvara stood in a worshipping posture saving he would go '.1 Then Hiranyavarma Mahārāja and Dharanikondapośar are mentioned; also the Nagarattar i.e., the citizens of Kanchipuram, the Mulaprakrti and the Kataka-Muttarayar. Mention is also made of the coronation (Abhishēka) of young Pallavamalla under the style Nandivarma,2

The Probable Interpretation of the Sculptures.—The sculptural representations in these panels taken along with the information contained in the Kaśākkudi plates³ help us to establish that there was a change of dynasty on the death of Paramēśvaravarman, and that Nandivarman II, till then named Paramēśvaran Pallavamalla was chosen to occupy the Pallava throne by the people. In this enterprise Nandivarman II appears to have received considerable help from Hiranyavarman I, and his trustworthy general Udayachandra whose exploits for the cause of his master are described in detail in the Udayēndiram plates. The Kaśākkudi plates dated in the

The actual text has been published in S.I.I., vol. iv, pp. 10-12.

³ Verse 27, S.I.I., vol. ii, part 3, p. 357. ⁴ Ibid., S.I.I., pp. 37-72, twenty-second year of this king records the important fact that 'he was chosen by his subjects'. The sculptures at the Vaikunthaperumāl temple have been interpreted as indicating a general election to the Pallava throne on the death of Parameśvaravarman II. 'The Kaśākkudi plates1 of Pallava king Nandivarman Pallavamalla tell us, that, after the death of Paramësvaravarman II, Nandivarman, son of Hiranyayarman, was chosen by his subjects. It may therefore be concluded that this part of the sculptures were intended to represent the various events connected with the succession of Nandivarman who might be the prince referred to in the notes as Pallavamalla. As the Vaikunthaperumal temple was called Paramēśvaravinnagaram, very probably after the Pallava king Nandiyarman Pallavamalla called also Parameśvaravarman2 it may be supposed that both the sculptures and the explanatory notes accompanying them were cut out soon after the temple itself was built."

It would be more accurate to consider that the sculptures at the Vaikunthaperumāļ temple at Kanchipuram taken as awhole represent the whole history of the Pallava family rather than the immediate events connected with the accession of Nandivarman Pallavamalla about the beginning of the eighth century. It is well known that the explanatory notes have not been filled in completely for all the long series of bas-reliefs of which only a small number could be interpreted with the heln of inscriptions.3 It is therefore incorrect to regard all these sculptures as being connected with only the immediate events relating to the accession of Nandivarman II. If we examine the sculptures from the commencement, almost from the first panel which presents Vishnu, to the following which represent Brahma, Angirasa, Brhaspati, Bhāradvāja, Drona and Aśvatthaman, the birth of Pallava, is found to be graphically represented while the rest illustrate and continue the family history.

S.I.I., vol. ii, part 3, p. 344.
 Paramësvaran Pallavamalla was the name and Nandivarman was the title of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. See S.I.I., vol. iv, No. 135, p. 11
 Para 2 of M.E.R. for 1906.

116 History of the Pallavas of South India

Then again it is not necessary to infer that Paramēśvaravarman II should have been either deposed or forced to retire from the throne.¹ The inscription here requires to be thoroughly re-interpreted. The correct explanation of the scene is the selection of Nandivarman Pallavamalla, then called Paramēśvaravarman Pallavamalla, to the throne from among the four sons of Hiranyavarman. The details (See footnote below) furnished in the descriptive labels fully confirm the statement in the Kaśākkudi plates that he was raised to the throne by the general approval of the citizens and thoroughly falsify the usurpation theory put forward by some writers.

The Position of Hiranyavarman.—The only difficulty still facing us is with reference to Hiranyavarman who is described in the newly-discovered copper-plates from Korrangudi as having actually ruled as king. The Tandantöttam plates make a glowing reference to him and describe his stirring prowess² in the field of battle, giving the impression that he was a ruling sovereign of Kānchī. The Vēlürpāļayam plates and the [&]quot;It has been generally supposed that Nandivarman Pallavamalla usurped the Pallava throne soon after Paramēšvaravarman II. This is not at all supported by the evidence furnished by the Vaikunthaperumāl temple sculptures which represent the events that took place immediately after the death of Paramēšvaravarman II leading to the accession of Pallavamalla. The inscriptional evidence has been translated thus in the Epig. Indica: "After the death of Paramēšvaravarman II, a deputation consisting of the Matras, the Malaprakritis and the Ghatakayar waited on Hiranyavarma. Maharaja and represented the fact that the country was without a ruler and requested him to grant them a sovereign. There upon king Hiranyavarman sent for the chief potentates (Kātamullar) and euquired which among them would accept the sovereign. All of them refusing, he asked his sons Srimalla, Ranamalla, Sangrāmamalla and Pallavamalla. Pallavamalla humbly offered to go, but king Hiranyavarman was at first unwilling to risk his son, who was then only twelve years of age, in such a perilous undertaking. But Hiranyavarman was soon persuaded by Darapikopdapōsar to give his consent. Receiving the weapons presented to him both by his father and Darapikopdapōsar, Pallavamalla proceeded to Kānchipuram, crossing on his way several hills, rivers and forests. Hearing of his approach a certain Pallavadi-Araiyar came with a large force, and placed him on an elephant's back and returned to the city where he was received by the fendatory chiefs, the members of the merchants' guild, the mulaprakritis, and Kadakka-Muttaraiyar. He was then crowned king under the name Nandivarman and with the insignia of Videlvedugu, Samadraghōsha, Khalavāngadavaja and Vrishabha lanchhana by the ministers' fendatories, the ghalakayar and the ubhāsiya-gaṇa.' Epig. Ind., vol. xviii, p. 117.

Verse 1, Tandantōṭtam plates, S.I.I., vol. ii, part 5, p. 520.

Bähür plates omit his name alogether. There cannot be any doubt that Hiranyavarman mentioned in the Kaśākkuḍi¹ plates as the immediate ancestor of Nandivarman II and the sixth descendant of Bhīmavarman, the brother of Simhavishnu, is the same as the Hiranyavarman figuring in the Tanḍantōṭṭam plates² as well as the bas-reliefs in the Vaikunthaperumāl temple just mentioned. According to Mr. Krishna Sastri, this Hiranyavarman was really Dautivarman, the son of Nandivarman II and the Tanḍantōṭṭam plates belonging to Nandivarman III, the son of Dantivarman, the donor of the Vēlūrpāļayam plates. He observes ³:—

The first plate of the preserved portion begins by referring to a king who conquered the south and states that a certain Hiranyavarman was born again " for the welfare of the world". . . . The father of Vijayanandivikramayarman is here stated to have been Hiranyavarman; while the father of Vijavanandivikramavarman is here stated to have been Hiranyayarman; while the father of Vijayanandivikramayarman according to the Velürpälavam plates was Dantivarman. If the proposed identity of Vijayanandivikramavarman with Vijavanandivarman is accepted, the apparent discrepancy in the name of the father could be explained. The statement that Hiranyayarman was born again, evidently indicates a second king of that name and we may suppose that Dantivarman, the father of Vijayanandivikramavarman, was also called Hiranyayarman like his grandfather Hiranyayarman 1, the father of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. If the foregoing surmises are confirmed by future researches the Tandantottam orant would be fifty-two years later than the Vēlūrpāļayam grants of the same king."

There arise, however, many difficulties in accepting this view and regarding that the Hiranyavarman of the Tandantöttam plates is the same as Dantivarman, the son of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. For one thing there is no evidence that Dantivarman had the surname Hiranyavarman as is supposed by Mr. Krishna Sastri. In the second place Ekadhira, a surname that occurs in the Tandantottam plates for Nandivarman II, also occurs in the Kaśakkudi plates of the same king thus proving that the donor of this grant was the same as the grant of Kaśakkudi. The palæography of these plates (Tandantottam) is according to scholars much too archaic to be assigned to the middle of the ninth century A.D. and really belongs to the middle of the eighth century, and are akin to the Kasakkudi plates. The objection to the high regnal year usually given for Nandivarman II by the epigraphists cannot be considered valid any longer as he is known to have succeeded to the throne in his twelfth year2 and as we have inscriptions and copper-plates of this sovereign dated in the forty-seventh, fiftieth, fifty-second, sixty-first, sixty-second and sixty-fifth years of his reign. Again the Tandantottam plates describe Nandivarman II as a devout worshipper of Vishnu, and this is in perfect accordance with all facts known about him and we cannot therefore imagine that he was also a devout worshipper of Siva as the donor of the Vēlūrpāļayam plates is said to have been. It is therefore very probable that Hiranyavarman mentioned in the Tandantottam as well as in the Korrangudi plates, dated in the sixty-first regnal year of Nandivarman II is identical with Hiranyavarman I, the father of Nandivarman II. Whether Hiranyayarma Maharaja was an independent ruler of Kanchi as hinted in the Korrangudi plates and whether he ruled for a long time, cannot be ascertained in the present state of our knowledge. It looks very probable that during Paramesvaravarman II's reign he wielded considerable power and was possibly placed in charge of a part of the Pallava dominions. The death of this ruler gave him an opportunity to install his son who was very young at the time of his accession as a ruler of Conjeevaram, and who reigned for an exceptionally long period as seen from inscriptions dated in the sixty-fifth year of his reign.3

Vide ante S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 520, S.I.I., vol. ii, part v. p. 518.

Jouveau-Dubreuil, Pallavas, p. 61.
² S.I.I., vol. iv, No. 135.
⁵ Ep. Coll., No. 666 of 1922.

Reign of Nandivarman II Pallavamalla, circa A.D. 710 to 775.- Let us first take up the duration of the reign. There is considerable difference of opinion as to the exact period of his reign. Certain scholars, including the officers of the Epigraphical Department' do not believe that Nandivarman Pallavamalla had anything like a length of reign indicated by the Tandantöttam and Korrangudi plates, and the inscriptions of Tiruvallam and Seven Pagodas all of which they wrongly assigned to Nandivarman III. It will be recollected that the Tiruvallam record is dated is the sixty-second year and that the inscription discovered at the Seven Pagodas2 is dated in the sixty-fifth year of Nandivarman. So far as we know this is the longest reign in the Pallava family and this is all the more remarkable because it was followed by another long reign namely that of Dantivarman, one of whose inscriptions is dated in the fifty-first year of his reign,3 the two reigns together covering 116 years. The officers of the Epigraphical Department however have been continuously attributing the high regnal years to Nandiyarman III* son of Dantivarman for reasons not altogether convincing or clear. Even in the Epigraphy Report for 1922-23 we come across with the following remarks:-

From the high regnal years given in the lithic regards5 of Mahābalipuram and in this copper-plate (Korrangudi plates) grant, the kings Nandipotavarman and Ko-Vijaya Nandi-

¹ It is very unlikely, observes H. Krishna Sastri in Mad. Epig. Rep. for 1912 'that a usurper like Pallavamalla with so many enemies to oppose and disturb his peaceful rule, could have continued to occupy the Pallava throne for so long a period as 50 years. His latest sure date, however, must be the 22od year in which the Kasakkudi plates were issued.' This is generally based on the assumption that no stone inscriptions hitherto discovered should be attributed to Nandivarman Pallavamalla. Mr. K. V. Subramanya Aiyar definitely opposed this view as early as 1917 in his Historical Sketches of Ancient Dekhan (p. 49) and the discoveries of subsequent records as well as the fresh interpretation of the Vaikunthaperumal inscriptions above referred to have amply proved the correctness of his inference. He has discussed the matter in detail in the Epig. Ind., vol. xviii, pp. 116-117, while editing the Pattalattamangalam grant of * S.I.I. vol. ü, p. 518.

* S.I.I. vol. ü, p. 518.

^{*} No. 666 of App. B.

vikramavarman mentioned in them respectively must be identical with Kovijaya Nandivikramayarman (Nandivarman III) of the Tandantottam plates and the Tiruvallam rock inscription.12 But some of the exploits recorded of this king in this record. conquest over the Vallabha, Kalabhra, Kērala, Pāndva, Chōla, Tuluva and Konkana as well as the invocation to Vishnu in the commencement of the record militates strongly against the view which attributes this record to Nandivarman III whose sore acrievements that we know of were the series of victories ending with that at Tellaru mentioned frequently in his inscriptions. It is therefore probable more especially as Nandivarman II is described to have followed Hiranyayarman that this record belongs to Nandivarman-II.2 The duration of his reign may therefore be definitely taken as not less than sixty-five years so far as present epigraphic evidence goes and that Nandivarman Pallavamalla lived at least to the age of seventy-seven.

Events of His Reign .- The most important events of his reign may be ascertained from his own copper-plates of which we have no less than four (viz.) the Kaśākkudi plates dated in the twenty-second year of his reign, the Udayendiram plates dated in the twenty-first year of his reign, the Tandantottam and the Korrangudi plates dated in the fifty-eighth and the sixty-first years of his reign. Of these the Udayendiram record gives valuable information regarding the military achievements of this period while the Kaśākkudi and the Korrangudi plates furnish details of his personal accomplishments and the culture of the period. The contemporary records such as the Kailasanatha temple inscription of Vikramāditya II, at Kānchipuram the Vakkalēri plates of Kirtivarman, the Kendur plates, as well as the Pandya records from Velvikkudi and Sinnamanur throw some light on the relations that subsisted between these powers and the Pallava king. The Vakkalëri plates, in particular furnish detailed information relating to the invasion of Kānchi by the Chāļukyan emperor Vikramāditya II and his exploits there.

¹M.E.R., 1902-3, p. 95. ² Ind. Ant., vol. viii, p. 23. " Note by Editor.

The Chalukyan Invasion of Kanchi.-The Pallava-Chalukya wars which had been lost sight of since the days of Narasimhavarman I, the Mahāmalla, appear to have been once more renewed. The Kendûr plates of Vikramāditya II describe an actual invasion into the Pallava dominions (Tundakarashtra) and the capture of the city in somewhat graphic terms :- Being resolved to uproot completely his natural enemy (prakrti-amitra) Vikramāditya II (A.D. 733 to 746) reached Tundāka-Vishava, 'beat and put to flight, at the opening of the campaign, the opposing Pallava king named Nandipotavarman, took possession of particular musical instruments called Katumukhavaditra, the Samudraghosha, the khatvänkhadvaja, many excellent and well-known intoxicated elephants and a heap of rubies which dispelled darkness by the brilliancy of the multitude of their rays. . . entered without destroying the city of Kanchi, which was as it were a girdle adorning yonder lady, the region of the south . . . rejoiced the Brahmanas, and poor and helpless people by his uninterrupted liberality . . . acquired high merit by restoring heaps of gold to the stone temple of Rajasimhēśvara, and other gods which have been caused to be built by Narasimhapotavarman . . . distressed by the Pandya, Chôla, Kērala, Kalabhra and other kings. . . . '2

The above extract from the Kendur plates distinctly makes it clear that Vikramāditya II actually captured the city of Kanchi from the Pallava king Nandipotavarman, that is, Nandivarman Pallavamalla, and occupied it for a period of time during which he endowed some of its temples with grants. This occupation of the Pallava capital by Vikramāditya is further confirmed by the discovery of a Kanarese inscription of Vikramāditya engraved on one of the pillars of

These are alluded to in the hymns of Tirumangai Āļvār in the Paramēšvaraviņnagaram verses in expressions which are literal translations in Tamil of the Sanskrit names of the war instruments. They also figure in the mutilated inscriptions at the Vaikunthaperumāl temple, Kānchipuram.

* Ep. Ind., vol. ix, p. 205.

the mandapa in front of the Rājasimhēśvara shrine. This inscription which has been published1 by Dr. Hultzsch records the fact that Vikramāditva Satyāśraya, after his conquest of Kānchi, did not confiscate the property of Rājasimhēśvara temple, but granted large sums to the same, and ends with an imprecation. The Chālukyan attack on Kānchi was therefore apparently different in character from the raid of the Pallava king Narasimhavarman I on Vātāpi which involved much destruction if the Periyapuranam account2 is to be believed.

When did this expedition on Kanchi start? Though no definite answer is possible it is presumable that this took place in the earlier half of Nandivarman's reign, in all probability between A.D. 733 to 746, when the Pallava king was preoccupied with wars against the southern powers.3 In any case the occupation of the city by the Chālukyan army does not appear to have lasted for any considerable period. Nandivarman II was not slow in summoning his forces, to drive out the foreign invader from Känchipuram. How this was brought about and when it was brought about are not clearly known. Whether the achievement was effected by the single-handed efforts of his own generals unaided by a coalition of other powers of the Tamil land, it is not also possible to say. It is however clear that Nandivarman Pallavamalla recaptured Kañchi, and continued to carry on the administration undismayed by the Chālukya invasion that took place. It is a mistake to suppose that the Chālukyan invasions in the reign of Pallavamalla either exhausted the resources, or cut short his reign. On the other hand in spite of the rude shocks that the raids of Vikramāditya and Kirtivarman must have caused, Nandivarman II continued in power as ruler of Kanchi for the unusually long period of

Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 359. Vide App. A.

Periapuranam, Sisuttondanayanar Puranam, v. 6.

This is confirmed by the presence of an inscription of Vikramāditya (II) in the Kailasanatha temple which records that Vikramaditya after his conquest of Kanchi did not confiscate the property of the Rajasimbësvara temple but enriched it by granting large sums of gold. (Fp. Ind., vol. iii, p. 339). Similarly the Vakkalëri plates also make reference to this event (Ind. Ant., vol. viii, p. 23).

sixty-five years as we may safely ascribe the inscription recently discovered at the Seven Pagodas1 to him.

Other Campaigns of Pallavamalla.- The reign of Nandivarman II appears to have been almost literally crowded with military engagements, sieges, invasions, and counter invasions. It has already been noticed that the Western Chāļukya invasion of Kānchi² which probably took place early in his reign resulted in the capture of the city by the The southern campaigns may now be noticed. Although the causes that brought about the conflict with the powers of the south especially the Pandyas of this period are by no means clear it may be surmised that the southern powers who were somehow dissatisfied with the accession of Pallavamalla to the throne of Kañchi, in supersession of the regular family, now espoused the cause of Chitramaya a young prince who presumably had some claims by descent from Paramëśvaravarman II. This involved Nandivarman II in a long and deadly campaign against the Dramila (Tamil) powers. In this campaign he seems to have received valuable help from his trusted general Udayachandra, the lord of Villivala, whose services are enumerated in the Udayendiram plates dated in the twenty-first year of his reign. The victories enumerated in the Vēļvikkudi and Sinnamanur plates for Arikesari-Parānkuśa-Māravarman at Neduvayal, Kurumadai, Mannikurichchi, Kodumbalür, Pūvalūr, Tirumangai, Kuļumūr, and Sankaramangai probably form part of the campaign of Pallavamalla and assigned to this period. Some of these battles such as those of Mannai, Neduvayal, Nenmali, etc., are referred to in the Paramesvaravinnagaram hymns of Tirumangai Āļvār.3 Many of these places also occur among the examples quoted in the commentary upon the Tamil work ¹ Ius. No. 666 of 1922. This inscription is wrongly ascribed to Nandivarman III in M. R. 1923. The reference in (verse 7) the Patattalmangalam grant of Nandivarman II that he ruled as King while yet very young and the statement in the Vaikurthaperunal temple inscriptions that the prince was twelve years old at the time of coronation confirm the longevity of this reign.

Raid on the south by Vinayaditya, son of Vikranaditya.

³ Per. Tir. ii, 9.

Iraiyanar-Ahapporul which also mentions many other places not mentioned in the inscriptional records Kottaru. Nāraiyāru. Viliñam, etc.

Siege of Nandipura.-One of the most important of the achievements of Udavachandra whose exploits are enumerated in the Udayendiram plates1 was the release of Nandivarman II from the fortified town of Nandipura which was besieged by his enemies the Tamil kings. Nandipura which is identical with Nandipuravinnagaram of Tirumangai Alvar is situated not far from the modern town of Kumbhakonam, and is nowa days known as Nathan-Kovil. During the later Pallava age especially in the eighth century, this place appears to have served as the seat of Pallava power in the southern districts, and was presumably fortified. It is noteworthy that the hymns to this shrine of Tirumangai Alvar, who was a contemporary of Pallavamalla, have a clear reference to Nandivarman.2 The circumstances that led to the siege of this place by the southern powers are not clear. But it has been presumed that the Tamil powers joined together in a great coalition espousing the cause of Chitramaya, the Pallava prince, and attacked Pallavamalla at a time when he had been staying at Nandipura. The circumstances relating to the release, and list of the other battles are described in the Udayendiram plates.

Udayachandra's Exploits.-Udayachandra is described in the record as the lord of the River Vegavati, and of the city Vilvala,3 the ornament of the whole world. Born of the race of Puchan, which had been in the uninterrupted hereditary service of the Pallava race . . . 'when he perceived that Pallavamalla was besieged in Nandipura by the Dramila

^{1 11. 37} to 62.

[·] simpowych gulaisfigi adgilyk sisawski elward Dadrant algout Carde Dary Edgestard aspengiarms ampuradament addisord Ourgland en Buent Cougant at Burdeten and petropies Cal princes, unable to bear this, like the visible death of the crowd of enemies of Pallavamalla, (he) slew with (his) sharp sword which glittered like a petal of water-lily, the Pallava king Chitramaya and others; he defeated the hostile army on the battle-fields of Nimbavana Chūtayana, Śankaragrāma, Nellūr, Nelvēli, Śūravalundur, and so forth, and thus bestowed the whole kingdom many times on the Pallava. . . . He split the opposing Sabara king called Udayana, in the terrible battle of Nelvěli, which could hardly be entered by a common man, and seized his mirror banner made of a peacock's tail; who in the northern region also, pursued the Nishada chief, called Prithivi-Vyagra who desiring to become very powerful was running after the horse of the Asvamedha, defeated him and ordered him out of the district of Vishnurăia, which he subjected to the Pallava, and seized faultless pearl necklaces of excellent lustre, an immesurable heap of gold, and elephants; and he destroyed the fort of Kālidurga, which was protected by the Goddess Kāli, and defeated the Pandya army at the village of Mannaikudi.' 1

See Nandipuravinnagarapatikam, Per. Tiru., v. 10. Identified with Vilvalanagara-villivalam in the Chingleput District.

Among the localities mentioned wherein Udayachandra achieved victories for his master occurs, Nellore which is identical with the headquarter station of the modern Nellore District. Nelveli is probably identical with Nenmali mentioned by Tirumangai Āļvār in his Periya-Tirumoli.² It is identified by Dr. Hultzsch with modern Tinnevelly. If the Sabaras are identical with the modern Sauras of the Ganjam and Vizagapatam District it would not be correct to identify Nelveli where the Sabara king is said to have been killed (1.52) with Tinnevelly. It is therefore to be identified with some other place on the border of the Telugu districts. We may identify the Vishnurāja with the Eastern Chāļukya king Vishnuvardhana III who was a contemporary Vikramāditya II. The Sankaragrāma mentioned in the Udayēndiram plates has been identified with Sankaramangai mentioned in the larger ¹ II. 37 to 62, Udayêndiram plates ; S.I.I., vol. ii, part 3, p. 372. ் 2 கேல்லில் வெருக்கெறியை சலக்கைப் அத்த மடைத்திறம் பல்லவர்கேன்—ii, 9, 8.

Sinnamanur plates, while Mannaikudi is identical probably with the Mannikurichchi of the Velvikudi plates where Ko-Śadaiyan claims a victory over the Pallavas. Mannaikudi may be identified with the village of Manakudi in the Arantangi Taluk of the Taniore District. The battle-fields of Nimbavana. Chūtavana and Śankaragrāma may be similarly identified with Veppangadu, Kovilūr (Tiruvūšattānam of the Tevaram) and Sankaranārkudikādu.1 The region in and around these places in the Tanjore District appears to have figured largely in the campaigns of the Pallavas against the Pandyas, and are evidently alluded to in the hymns of Tirumangai Alvar, in the Paramēśvaravinuagarapatikam.

One of the references in the Udayendiram plates, namely, the Asvamedha horse which was detained by Prithivi-Vyagra has been interpreted as containing a reference that Nandivarman Pallavamalla performed an Aśvamedha sacrifice 2 to celebrate his supremacy.

Rāshtrakūta Invasions on Kānchi.-The Rāshtrakūta kings who were contemporary with Nandivarman Pallavamalia claim victories over the Pallavas and their city. The Kadaba plates 3 distinctly mention Vayiramega as a surname of Dantidurga Räshtrakūta. Now, Vayiramēga is mentioned in Tirumangai Alvar's hymns on the deity of Ashtabhuja in Kanchipuram along with the local ruler of Kanchi.4 The verse under consideration has reference to two rulers, the local Pallava ruler of Kānchi and the foreign Rāshtrakūta ruler Vayiramega in occupation of Kanchi just then. The 1 Sen-Tam., vol. xxii, pp. 10, 11.

² 1. 56, Udayëndiram plates. P. T. Srinivasa Alyangar's Pallavas. There are no independent references in the published records to prove tint Pallavamalla performed an Asvamedha sacrifice. The reference to this sacrifice in the Udayeadirani plates does not specify that it was performed by this Pallava King.

Ep. Ind., vol. iv, p. 334.
 For a discussion on the identity of Vayiramega see Quart. Jour. Myth. Society, vol. xiii, pp. 581-8 and pp. 698-700.

aururwar Opiniran, wiGarar wardigib Khippyar bewile Positi مناسو تورووره درباستهم الأفورون ودر شواده شو narabest arefle reine Cutya reagliteeleard man marchaneuryCordine OrigCordinathi appadentelaDich immybplia.

conquest of Kānchi is also alluded to in the Ellora inscription as well as in the Bagumra plates, of Govinda III from which we learn that Dantidurga first reduced the lowermost (southern) country, then turned his enemies to Madhyadēśa and finally conquered the city of Kānchi. From the Vēlūrpālayam plates we learn that Nandivarman Pallavamalla's queen was called Rēva and that his son was called Dantivarman. From this it has been conjectured that there was soon after the invasions of Kānchi by Dantidurga a marriage alliance between the Pallava king and the daughter of Dantidurga, and the son born to the Rāshtrakūta princess was called Dantivarman after the maternal grandfather. This Rāshtrakūta-Pallava pact does not appear to have prevented Govinda III from leading another invasion on the Pallava capital and levying tribute from Dantiga of Kānchi.

Expedition against the Gangas.—The military exploits of Nandivarman II thus appear to have filled every part of his reign and almost all contemporary dynasties of the day seem to have come into hostile contact with him. To these powers, the Pāndyas, the Rāshṭrakūtas, the eastern Chāļukyas, the western Chāļukyas, may be added the Gangas. What led to the conflict with the Gangas is not clearly stated, but verse 6 of the Tandantöṭṭam plates make a specific reference to the fact that Nandivarman took away a neck ornament from which contained in it the gem called Ugrōdaya. Although the name of the Ganga king is not mentioned, it may be presumed that he must have been either Śivamara or Śrīpurusha. As the earlier plates dated in the twenty-first and twenty-second years of his reign do not specify this detail this achievement probably took place in the later half of his reign.

Religious Leanings.—The religious leanings of Nandivarman Pallavamalla were towards Vaishnavism. His celebrated

Ep. Ind., vol. ix, p. 24.
 Verse vi, Ep. Ind., vol. ix, p. 24.
 Vēlūrpālayam plates, verse 18.

^{*} Ind. Ant., vol. x, p. 125. 5 S.I.I., vol. ii, part S, p. 519.

contemporary seems to allude to his worshipful attitude in the present tense in his hymn on the God of Ashtabhuja at Kānchī. His copper-plates describe him as never accustomed to bowing 'excepting to the pair of worshipful feet of Mukunda' (Vishnu)1 as worshipping the feet of Hari.2 The newly-found plates of Korrangudi devote several invocatory verses to Vishou (verses 1 and 2). The unnamed Pallava king who is mentioned by Tirumangai Alvar as having worshipped at Śrirangam is presumably Nandiyarman Pallayamalla3 as also the king called Nandi in the Nandipuravinnagarapatikam.

State of Learning during Nandivarman's Reign.-The copperplates of this and following period give excellent glimpses into the nature of learning during this period as well as of government, etc. The donees enumerated in the Kaśākkudi plates and the Tandantottam plates numbering several 1 Verse 12, Tandantöttam plates. Ibid. 2 Verse 30, Kāšākkudi plates. Ibid.

He is the lord of the circle of good people as Harl is the possessor of the powerful weapon Chakra, him the wise cling to as Gods to Sakra (Indra).

He wore on his breast, as it were the lord of serpents, the bed of Achypta dwelling near his heart a necklace, which he had snatched away from the Ganga king and in which was the gem called Ugrodaya like the Kaustuba (verse 6).'

Other details of the king in somewhat exaggerated terms are also available from this copper-plate grants. Some interesting also available from this copper-plate grants. Some interesting personal accomplishments and qualities are furnished in the produsti portion of the Kašākkudi grant composed by Trivikrama. In terse 29 we read:— This Sridhara (Pallavamalla) resembles Vijaya in battle, Karnisuta, in acquaintance with the arts, Rāma in archery, the king of Vatsa with reference to the science of elephants and to ausic, Kāma in the opinion of women, the first poet (Valmiki) in the composition of poetry, the master of policy (Brhaspati) himself in suggesting expedients, and (Dharma) Yndhishtira in delighting the subjects.' Verse 2 of the Tandantöttam plates say of him :- From him (Hiranyavarman) was born the wise and the prosperous king called Nandivarman who was the home of prowess and conqueror of the hoards of his enemies, whose victorious elephant teached almost the shores of the four oceans, whose fame extended to the four quarters and who was praised in battle for his knowlede in the use of all weapons. Verse 3 of the same record says, 'The only one of name Raja that did not bow to him was the dead-rayed moon and the only country in this world that did not pay tribute to him was that where no men exist. And while this king comparable to lodra was ruling the earth, there was nothing unapproachable by the people except perhaps the way leading to hell, hundreds are many of them, if we may judge from their titles, masters of three and four Vedas of the six angas, etc. Of the 244 and odd names that are mentioned in the Tandantottam plates no less than a hundred were Chaturvedis, 18 were Shadangavids, while there are several Kramavids, Bhattas and Trivedis. The accomplishments of an average South Indian Brahman scholar in the field of Sanskrit learning during the eighth century may be gathered from the following description of the donee of the Kasakkudi charter dated in the twenty-second year of Nandivarman II's reign the object of which was to register a gift of village to a Brahman scholar whose name was Jyeshtapada Somayāji. The extract gives some idea of what the average Brahmanical educational curriculum consisted in those times:—

· While the twenty-second year of his reign was current, this Rājādhirāja-paramēśvara, the Mahārāja called Nandivarman. who is engaged in ruling the kingdom of Paramesvarapotarāja, . . . was himself pleased to give as a Brahmadēya, as requested by Brahmaśriraja . . . who just as Brhaspati is minister of Indra, the lord of heaven, is the chief minister of the handsome Nandin, the lord of the earth and the chief of the Pallavas, to Jyeshtapada Somayajin, who has mastered the ocean-like Vedas, who chants the Saman hymns which are pleasant on account of their melody (rasa); who has completed the rehearsal and the study of the six auxiliary works. namely, the ritual of the Veda, grammar, astronomy, etymology, phonetics and metrics; who knows the properties of words, sentences and subjects; who has drunk the elixir of the sruti and smrti; who is learned in the portion referring to rites (Karmakanda) and the portion referring to knowledge (Jāānakānda); who is skilled in the ways of the world and in the knowledge of the arts; who is versed in the poems. dramas, stories, epics and legends; in short who is skilled in all branches of (holy and profane) knowledge; who is expert in the performance of all rites; who is of good conduct; (who illumines) the world as a lamp does a house; who is courteous (in spite of) the honour paid to him and of noble birth: who is the only sun of the middle world, namely earth. because he has dispelled all ignorance or darkness; who is considered the best of fathers and grandfathers who ranks first among the twice born; who knows the Vedas; who conforms to the precepts of the Vedas; who follows the Chandoga-sūtra, who has performed Vājapēya and other sacrifices; who belongs to the Bharadvaja-Gotra; who resides at Puniya, an excellent settlement of Brahmanas, in the Tundākarāshtra; who is poor in sins, who is distinguished by his dress, who is a unique person; who cares for both worlds; who accomplishes the three objects of human life, who knows the four Vedas; whose chief objects are the five primary elements (Panchamahabhūta), who knows the six auxiliary works, who resembles the sun, who possesses good qualities and who is an excellent Brahman,-a whole village, the original name of which was Kodukolli which on becoming a Brahmadeya received the new name of Ekadhiramangalam, in Undivanakosthaka in the same räshtra. . . . ' 1

Some Celebrities of the Period .- It has already been pointed out that the king himself like other royal members of the family was a scholar of considerable reputation and is compared to Karnīsuta for his acquaintance with arts and to Valmīki the first poet in the composition of poems (v. 28) while verse 4 of the Tandantottam plates record the fact that the learned people cling to him as the gods to Sakra. Among the Sanskrit poets of this period mentioned in the royal charters may be mentioned Paramesvara, Uttara Karanika, and Trivikrama the composers of the prasasti in the Udayendiram. Tandantöttam and Kaśakkudi plates. The celebrated scholar and saint Tirumangai Alvar was his contemporary and is another product of the times reputed for his skill in dialectics and known as the master of four kinds of poetical compositions. (Chatushkavi, Nālukaviperumāļ). His work in the Nalayiraprabhandam exceeds those of any other Vaishnava saint excepting that of Nammalvar and forms one of the most precious collections that have come down to us. His great regard for the Pallava family and individual Pallava kings and their services finds continuous mention in his hymns to an extent far greater than in the Tevāram hymns, or other works by the Vaishnava Āļvārs themselves. He was for some time a petty chieftain of Ālinādu in the Chōlamandala before he became a devout Vaishnava saint. His contributions in the Nālāyiraprabhandam are Periya-Tirumoļi, Tirukurundāndakam, Tirunedundandakam, Siriya-Tirumadal, Periya-Tirumadal, Tiruveļukkūrjirukkai.

¹ II. 71 to 103, Kašākkudi plates, S.I.I., vol. ii, part 2, pp. 358 ff.

Among the temples attributable to Nandivarman II may be mentioned the Kēśavaperumal temple at Kūram, the Muktēśvara temple at Kāūchipuram, Vīratlānēśvara at Tiruvadi and the Kunrāndarkōvil at Pudukotta. The Vaikuntaperumāl temple at Kāūchī, the Paramēśvaraviņnagaram of Tirumangai Āļvār probably owes its origin to this king and named after his personal name which was Paramēśvaran. Extensive renovation works must have taken place in a large number of other temples, if we could judge from grants recorded to many of these.

The reign of Nandivarman Pallavamalla lasted for sixty-five years according to the inscription discovered recently at Mahabalipuram 1 and covered the greater part of the eighth century. He was succeeded on his death by his son called Dantivarman through the Rāshṭrakūṭa princess Rēva about A.D. 775. The notion that his reign was short having been distracted by continuous wars as a result of which his kingdom was much reduced now appears to be incorrect. The inscriptions so far discovered of his reign and that of his son have been found in regions as distant as Trichinopoly to Tirupati which probably comprised the extent of his dominions.

^{*} Ep. Coll. 666 of 1922.

CHAPTER IX

SUCCESSORS OF PALLAVAMALLA

T has already been pointed out that the newly discovered Inscription of Nandivarman at the Adivaraha temple at Mahabalipuram dated in the sixty-fifth year probably represents the last year of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. If this is a genuine record the reign of this king must have come to a close about the year A.D. 775. For the succeeding period of a century and a quarter during which the Pallava power continued before the region comprised in their kingdom was annexed by the Cholas, we come across with the names of a number of kings who, to judge from their names, must have been members of the Pallava family. Of these it is a little difficult to separate the lineal descendants of Nandiverman Pallavamalla from the rest. We have for instance stone inscriptions or copper-plate records for Dantivarman. Nandivarman, Nripatungavarman, Kampavarman, Iśvaravarman, Narasimhavarman, Vayiramegavarman and Chandraditya, all of whom are ascribable to this period (circa A.D. 800-900). The task of distinguishing these kings and assigning them to particular periods on the evidence of inscriptions has been rendered not a little difficult by the use of certain prefixes and affixes to names which have bewildered some scholars and led them to postulate strange theories. The most important of these is what is known as the 'Ganga-Pallaya theory ' which was adopted by the official epigraphists1 almost until recently. This may be illustrated by a specific

Ep. Ind., vol. iv, p. 182; S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 344; Ibid., p. 505.
The untenability of this theory is discussed by the late T. A. Gopinatha Rao in the Madras Christian College Magazine, vol. xxiv, pp. 530-9 and by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Pallavas, pp. 47-58.

example. The Pallava king Dantivarman who is known to have ruled for over fifty years and succeeded Nandivarman Pallavamalla figures in inscriptions as Dantivarma-Mahārāja, Dantivikramavarman, Dantipottaraśar, Dantivarman of the Pallavatilakakula, and Ko-Vijaya-Dantivikramavarma. Similarly in the case of Nandivarman it is equally difficult as this name occurs in the inscriptions and copper-plate records in the following varieties: - Nandipottaraśar, Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman, Nandivarman of the Bharadvaja Gotra, the victorious Nandipõttarayar of Telläru and Danti-Nandivarman. The difficulty is also intensified as the inscriptions of these kings have been found not indistinctly separate localities but indiscriminately throughout the region of the Pallava kingdom. As none of these records is dated in the Saka or any known era their date has to be determined independently by means of palæography and other details noted in inscriptions.

The Probable Order of Succession .- It is well known that Tondamandalam was conquered by Aditya before the twentyfirst year of his reign. It is also clear that Parantaka I ascended the Chola throne in the year A.D. 907.1 As the Brahmadēśam and Tirukaļukkunram inscriptions are dated in the twenty-seventh year of Rajakesarivarman, who is identical with Aditya I, it may be presumed that the first year of his reign was A.D. 880. One of his inscriptions in the North Arcot District in the twenty-first year of his reign which records a donation near Kalahasti shows that by A.D. 900 his empire had extended as far as Kāļahasti thus covering the Pallava empire.2 The reigns of Dantivarman, Nandivarman, Nripatungavarman, Aparājita, Kampavarman and the other miscellaneous kings of the Pallava family whose inscriptions have been discovered in these regions have to be assigned to the period between about A.D. 900 and the last quarter of the eighth century when Pallavamalla ceased to rule. Omitting the reigns of the miscellaneous rulers like Kampavarman, Vayirameghavarman, Kattirai, etc., we find that the total reigns of the others so far known comprise a period of roughly 118 years.1

¹ Ins. 735 of 1905.

² Ep. Rep., 1907, p. 11.

- 0.4

If the conquest of the Tondamandalam and the victory over Aparājita recorded in the Tiruvālangādu plates,² may be assigned to the year A.D. 893, we may, by calculating backwards, assign the above-mentioned kings to the following periods which is in complete accordance with the evidence obtainable from contemporary Pallava inscriptions and copperplates.³ The reigns of the Pallava kings named Vijaya Kampavarman, Narasimhavarman, etc., most probably overlapped those of the last two members above mentioned. The probabilities seem to be that towards the last quarter of the ninth century several members of the family began to rule their own small territories styling themselves kings, and these chiefs largely figure in the inscriptions that have come down to us along with the others.

Dantivarman (circa 775 to 826).—We have ascertained the exact period of his accession to the throne of Kānchīpuram by calculating back from the conquest of Tondamandalam by Āditya. We possess inscriptions for Dantivarman dated from the second year of his reign (No. 256 of 1922) to fifty-first year (No. 262 of 1904). His records have been found from Trichinopoly District in the south to Tiruchchānūr in the north. According to the Vēlūrpāļayam plates (verse 16) issued during the reign of his son Nandivarman III he was descended from Nandivarman Pallavamalla through Rēvā the Rāshtrakūṭa princess.⁴ Rēvā is here described as the chief queen who

Nandivarman Nandivarman (of Tellaru) Nripatunga		P$4	100
Aparājita	414	9.40	1+1	18 ,,
		Total		118 ,,
* S.I.I., vol. iii, p. 396, verse	49.
³ Dantivarman	111	988	45.9	775-826
Nandivarman III		++4	4++	826-849
Nripatungavarman	3 44	194	114	849-875
* S.I.I., vol. ii, part 5, p. 501.		785	241	875-893

like the river Reva had her birth from a great king (from a high mountain).' Dantivarman is stated to be 'a manifestation of the lotus-eved Vishnu himself, who was the delight of the earth whose object was the protection of the three worlds and in whom the group of pure qualities such as prowess. charity, and gratitude, attained eminence, as it were, after a long time enjoying the pleasures of each other's company.' 2 From verse 18 we learn that Dantivarman married a Kadamba princess called Aggalanimmati described as the daughter of a Kadamba king-the crest-jewel of the Kadamba family. The name of this Kadamba king is not known. About the year A.D. 804 Govinda III, the Rashtrakūta king, appears to have invaded Kānchi. A Rāshtrakūta grant, dated Thursday the fifth tithi of the dark fortnight of the month of Vaisāka of the year Subhānu, Śaka 726, expired, corresponding to Thursday, 4th April, A.D. 804, claims that Govinda III had conquered Dantiga, the ruler of Kanchi and levied tribute from him." The reasons prompting this Rashtrakuta attack on Kanchi especially as Dantivarman the Pallava king was presumably a grandson of Dantidurga are not clear.

One of his Tamil inscriptions dated in the twelfth year of his reign has been discovered at the Parthasarathi temple at Triplicane (Madras).4 This inscription consists of nineteen lines of Tamil prose and is on a stone close to the entrance of the garbhagtha of the temple. Dantivarman is here described as the ornament of the Pallava family' and as belonging to the Bhāradvāja Gotra. The object of the inscription is to record a gift of land. It is clear from this record that the Triplicane temple which is mentioned also in the hymns of the first Alvars, continued to flourish during this period. Tirumangai Alvar, one of the Vaishnava Alvars, refers to this temple and the locality, and has recorded the important fact that a Pallava king constructed the temple.5

^{*} Ibid., p. 508, vv. 16, 17. Ind. Ant., vol. xi, p. 127.
 This Pallava king referred to by Tirumangai Alvar was presumably an 1 Ibid., p. 508, vo. 16, 17.

earlier king of Kanchi who preceded Dantivarman.

136 History of the Pallavas of South India

Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil argues, i from the fact that the inscription of Dantivarman ranging from the sixteenth year of his reign to the fifty-first year does not occur in any of the monuments found on the banks of the Kaveri while a dozen inscriptions of the Pāndyan king Māran Śadaiyan are found in the same region, that Dantivarman temporarily lost a part of his dominions in the south owing to the incursions of the Pāndyas. According to him Varaguṇa-Mahārāja led an invasion into the Pallava territory in the reign of Dantivarman. The Ambāsamudram inscription of the sixteenth year of this king is dated when this king was encamped in Araisūr on the banks of the Pennar. In the north, the Gudimallam inscription shows that the Bāṇa king Vijayādityamāvalivāṇarāyar was a feudatory of Dantivarman. This record is dated in the forty-ninth year of Dantivarman.²

Nandivarman III (circa A. D. 826 to 849) .- Dantivarman was succeeded on his death by his son Nandivarman III known in his inscriptions as Tellarrerinda Nandivarman, i.e. Nandivarman who defeated his enemies at Tellaru. According to the Velurpalayam plates issued by this sovereign in his sixth year he is said to have, on the eve of his acquiring sovereignty, killed his enemies on the field of battle.3 In the picturesque words of this record 'Nandivarman puffed up with the prowess of his arms acquired the prosperity of Pallava kingdom not easy for others to obtain by killing his enemies on the battle-field which was laughing as it were with the pearls dropping from the frontal globes of elephants slain by his unsheathed sword.' A contemporary Tamil work is Nandikkalambakam. A short account of this work appeared in the Indian Antiquary (vol. 37, pp. 170-173). The text of the poem which has long been out of print was published in 1926 by Pandit V. Gopala Aiyar states that Nandivarman won a great victory against his enemies at the battle of Tellaru. In the light of the information obtained from his other stone inscriptions it becomes clear that this must be the battle referred to in the Vēlūrpālayam plates quoted above. It has already been mentioned that towards the close of Dantivarman's reign the Pandyan forces under Varaguna made considerable inroads into the Pallava empire and had reached as far north1 into Tondamandalam as Araisur on the banks of the Pennar. By the time that Nandivarman III ascended the throne the forces of the opposing Pandyan king must have reached near Tellaru not very distant from the Pallava capital when the forces of Nandivarman III inflicted a crushing defeat on them. Tellaru the site of the battle may be correctly identified with the village of Tellaru in the Wandiwash Taluk of North Arcot District.

Other Battles .- This victory against the Pandyans gave him the title by which his inscriptions thereafter mention him, namely, Tellarrerinda Nandipotarayar. The Tamil panegyric in addition to the battle of Tellaru 2 also refers to the other victories of Nandivarman such as those of Palayaru,3 Vellaru,4 Nallaru,3 and Kurugodu.6 This series of further campaigns were evidently directed against the Pandyas themselves whom the Pallava king apparently pursued as they were retreating and inflicted defeats at Vellaru, Palayaru, etc. One of the stanzas in the poem says that the Pallava army advanced as far as the banks of the Vaigai.7 If this is correct we may presume that Nandivarman III marched as far as the Pandyan capital and defeated the Pandyas thoroughly.

Light thrown by ' Nandikkalambakam'.- This work makes it clear beyond doubt, that Nandivarman was a member of the ¹ Ep. Coll. No. 105 of 1905. * Verses 28, 33, 38, 49, 52, 53, 71, 75, 79, 80, 85, 86 and 96. numbers refer to those of a MS. Edn., the work with the author. 2 Verse 61. * Verse 23. 3 Verse 31. 5 St. 4 and 81.

^{*} Verses 2, 35 and 84.

Pallava family as it calls him Pallavarkon several times. The poem throws some light on the race of the Pallava family. Verse 39 refers to Nandivarman as ' Chandrakula-Prakasan' thus indicating that the Pallava family claimed their descent from the lunar race, a fact which is not however mentioned in any of the inscriptions. It is also clear from this work that Kanchipuram, Mallai (Mahabalipuram) and Mayilai (Mylapur) were the chief Pallava cities during this period. The sway over these places is associated with the name of Nandivarman III by such references as 'Mallai-Vendan', 'Mayilai-Kavalan'. In this work his rule is also associated with the region of the Kaveri (Kavirivalanadan), the Kongu country, the Chera land, the western regions as well as the northern. Inscriptions found in the northern regions of Pallava kingdom such as those of the Bana king Vikramāditya clearly prove that his sway over the Bāṇas was not merely a poetic boast but real.1 This king appears to have indulged his fancy in the assumption of a large number of surnames. This Tamil work enumerates the following surnames of this sovereign ' Avani-Naranan', ' Videlvidugu', 'Ugrakopan', 'Kuvalaya-Martandan', 'Manodaya', 'Varatungan ', etc. Nandivarman III appears to have patronized the Tamil poets very largely as is evident from allusion to this in verses 104 and 107 of the work. The author of the Bharata-Venba, Perundevanar, is taken to have flourished during his reign. The invocatory verses attached to the Udyogaparva of this work, which alone has come down to us, mentions the defeat inflicted by Nandivarman III on his enemies at Telläru.2

Some interesting details may be gathered from the copperplates of this period regarding the king and his rule. Verse 14 of the Bähür plates says that Nandivarman III had for his queen a Räshtraküţa princess called Śankā 'who was kind to the people like a mother, was resplendent as Lakshmi incarnate.'

¹ No. 229 of 1903 and S.J. J., vol. viii, p. 93,

^{*} Note by Editor.

Verse 21 of the Vēlūrpāļayam plates says of his rule:
Never shone so (thoroughly a garden with the advent of) spring, nor men of high birth with (good) qualities, nor women with morality, nor a millionaire with charity, nor humility with knowledge, nor a lotus tank with the sun, nor the expanse of the sky with the moon at the end of the rainy season, as the people of this earth shone with the king.'

From the same record we learn that Nandivarman III was a devout worshipper of Siva¹ and this is corroborated by verse 97 of Nandikkalambakam.

Nripatungavarman (circa 849 to 875).—Nripatungavarman known also as Nripatungavikramavarman and Nripatungapōtarayar succeeded his father Nandivarman about A.D. 850, The resemblance of his name to the Rāshtrakūta Amogavarsha Nripatunga as well as the fact that his mother, the queen of Nandivarman III, is stated to be a Rāshtrakūta princess in the Bāhūr plates 2 would indicate that this king was a grandson on the mother's side from Amogavarsha. Nripatunga appears to have continued the campaigns against the Pāndyas who made inroads into the Pallava territory. The Bāhūr plates mention one of his victories on the banks of the Arichit (apparently a Sanskritized form of Ariśil) which has been identified with River Araśalār which flows near

भुकृतमिदमनस्त्रम् रक्षतेति क्षितीशास्सकस्रम् पतिकेतुस्सोयमागा-मिनो वः ।

हरचरणसरोजोत्तंसचिह्नेन मृष्ट्री मुकुळित करपक्षो बन्दते नन्दि-

वर्मी । S.I.I., vol. ii, part v, p. 509, 11. 64-5.

^{*} Ibid., vol. v, p. 515.

Kumbhakonam by the late Mr. T. A. Gopinatha Rao.1 His adversary at this battle was probably Varaguna's son Śri-Māra Parachakra-Kolāhala who according to the Tamil portion of the Sinnamanur plates 2 is described as having repulsed the Gangas, the Pallavas, the Cholas, the Kalingas, and the Magadhas who attacked him at Kudamükku, the name by which the modern town of Kumbhakonam was known in the period before the tenth century.3

Extent of Empire. - The inscriptions of Nripatungavarman have been discovered all over the region from Pudukotta in the south to Gudimallam in the north. From an inscription 4 of the Bana king at the latter place-Vidvadhara-we learn that Nripatunga's sway was acknowledged by this Bana chief. The Narthamalai inscription of the Muttaraiyan chief Sattan-Palivili in the south who was one of Nripatunga's vassals shows that the authority of this king extended to the region of Pudukotta.5 From the description contained in the Bahur plates that the glory of Nripatunga extended to other worlds as that of Rama, we may presume that here is an

'यःप्रसादाजिता सेना पाण्डोन समरे प्रा। पारे रिचित्सराज्यश्रादंदाह रिप्संहतिम् ॥ V. 29.

v. 16. S.I.I., vol. ii, part 5, p. 515.

The translation of the late T. A. Gopinatha Rao which Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil follows requires to be reconsidered in view of an altered reading of the verse given in Dr. Hultzsch's of verse 16 (p. 50, Pallanas) text (Ep. Ind., vol. xvii!, p. 10) in which the sixteenth verse reads as follows:—

Yatprasādā(r) jiltāsēnā Pandvēna Samarē purā I

Parerichitsarajagnirddadaha ripusamhatim || We have here no reference to the defeat sustained (by the Pallavas) at the hands of the Pandyas referred to in Gopinatha Rao's translation. Dr. Hultzsch translates the verse thus:—Resembling fire, this king (Nripatunga) by whose favour the Pāṇdya had obtained an army formerly burnt a confederation of enemies on the further bank of the Arichit river. The supply of an army by Nripatunga to the Pandyan king, if the reading is correct, will necessitate a revision of our present views of the relation-ship of the Pallavas and Pandyas during this period.

M.E.R., 1907, pp. 63 ff.
Inscription No. 13 of 1908 dated in the reign of Māran-Sadaiyan calls the place Tirukudamūkku. The Tevaram hymners also call the town Tirukudamükku.

^{*} No. 228 of 1903.

⁹ No. 365 of 1904.

allusion perhaps to an unrecorded invasion of Ceylon during his reign.

Educational Facilities .- A glimpse into the educational grants of the period is obtained from the Bähur plates2 which were issued in the eighth year of this king. This record has for its object the registering of the gift of three villages-Chettupakkam, Iraipunaicheri and Vilangattangaduvanur to the Vedic college at the village of Bāhūr3 near Pondicheri in Aruvānādu. The grant was made by a member of the Pūśāli family and a descendant of the Kuru race (verse 18). This chief was the minister of Tungavarman, that is, Nripatunga who issued the necessary order for the grant of the villages (verse 21). The college at Bähür consisted of fourteen ganas, and was controlled by the learned men of the village, being organized and maintained by them. The fourteen ganas * are presumably the fourteen divisions of learning and consisted of-the Vedas (4), the Angas (6), Mimāmsa (1), Nyāya (1), Purāṇa (1) and the Dharma-Śāstra (1).

Aparajitavarman (circa A.D. 875 to 883).—The order of succession after Nripatungavarman is not quite clear. According to the late Mr. Venkayya, Aparājita is the name of the son Nripatungavarman while T. A. Gopinatha Rao propounded the theory that the name Aparājita is merely another name for Nripatunga. In the inscriptions of this period we come across with several names such as Vijaya-Kampavarman, Vayiramēghavarman, Aparājitavarman and others. Of these we have inscriptions for Aparājitavarman ranging from the third to the eighteenth years of his reign in the region around Madras mostly from Tiruvorriyūr and Satyavēdu. It is

¹ Ibid., verse 17, S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 515.

² This record which is now preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, has been recently re-edited with English translation and notes by the late Dr. E. Hultzsch who also furnishes two diagrams indicating the late Dr. be the villages granted in the charter which are reproduced elseposition of the villages granted in the charter which are reproduced elsewhere in this work. A palm-leaf MS. of this copper-plate containing where in this work. A palm-leaf MS. of this copper-plate containing different readings is now with Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar. Ep. Ind., vol. xviii, p. 5.

vol. xviii, p. 3.
³ Vahūr and some of the village names mentioned in the detailed description of the boundaries in the grant survive to the present day.
* See S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 514 footnote.

presumed that Kampavarman and Isvaravarman as well as the other chiefs such as Vayirameghan, whose inscriptions have been discovered at Kaveripākkam, Uttaramallūr, Olakkur and other parts of Chengleput District enjoyed the rule of a part of the Pallava dominions along with Vayirameghavarman.

Two important events are known regarding Aparajita, The first of these is the campaign against the Pandyas in which the Pallava king was allied with the Ganga king Prithivipathi. According to the Udayendiram plates1 which enumerate the military exploits of the West Ganga Prithivinathi I, he is described as 'having defeated by force the Pandya lord Varaguna at the head of a great battle of Śripurambiya and having thus made his friend's title Aparājita (the unconquered) significant, this hero entered heaven by sacrificing his own life.' We may identify Varaguna with the Pāndya king of that name, Varaguna II, for whom we have a date for accession to the throne, namely, A.D. 862-863. The place of the battle Śripurambiyam has been identified by Dr. Hultzsch2 with Tirupurambiyam near Kumbhakonam. How the Western Ganga king Prithivipathi I whose dominions lay at least partly in the Mysore State and whose capital was Kolar, came to fight against the Pandya king Varaguna at Tirupurambiyam was hitherto inexplicable. From the two Ambur inscriptions3 of the Ganga-Pallava king Nripatungavikramavarman we know that Prithivipathi was his feudatory. It may, therefore, be presumed that Aparajita for whom the Western Ganga king fought was a Ganga-Pallava. If this be true Aparajita was perhaps the successor and presumably his son.'4 The battle of Śripurambiyam may be dated with approximate accuracy about the year A.D. 880.

The Chola Conquest of Tondamandalam.—It has already been indicated that the Chola king Āditya I who was making considerable inroads into the Pallava country brought about the defeat and ultimate conquest of the Tondamandalam about the close of the ninth century. This corresponded to the period before twenty-first year of Aditya. The latest of the Tirukalukkunram inscriptions1 is dated in the twenty-first year of Rajakesarivarman. 'Taking this provisionally as the last year of Aditya's reign and deducting it from A.D. 907, the date of accession of his son Parantaka I we get roughly to about A.D. 886 for the commencement of Aditya's reign. It is presumable that the conquest of Tondamandalam was effected considerably late in his reign and may be dated towards the end of the ninth century. The Tiruvalangadu plates say of the Choja king Āditya I, son of Vijayālaya,2 that 'having conquered in battle the Pallava with his brilliant army, though (he was) Aparājita (the unconquered) of his queen (viz.) and accomplished his object in this direction too.' In other words, the Chola king Aditya I defeated the Pallava king Aparājitavarman and added the Tondamandalam to his dominions. Thus the kingdom of Pallavas passed into the hands of the Cholas with the death of Aparajita.

¹ S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 384, verse 18. ² Ep. Ind., vol. iv, p. 182.

^{*} Ibid., vol. ii, part 3, p. 381. * M.E.R. for 1906-7, p. 47.

The monuments belonging to this period are in the Aparājita style and, in the opinion of Jouveau-Dubreuil, very rare. The Vīrattānēśvara temple at Tiruttani, which contains inscriptions dated in the eighteenth year of Aparājitavarman is attributable to this king the Tamil verse³ which is inscribed in this temple being supposed to have been composed by the king.

Other Miscellaneous Kings.—Some observations may be made on Kampavarman and Vayirameghavarman before closing the survey. Over twenty inscriptions have been discovered dated in the regnal years ranging from the sixth to the twenty-fifth years* of Kampavarman who according to Hultzsch was a brother of Nripatungavarman. Whether this king succeeded Nandivarman III as king, or whether in the confusion that followed the death of Nripatunga he made himself an independent ruler in the North Arcot District and the region round about Kānchi it is not clear from present evidence.

⁹ Ins. No. 433 of 1905. 2 v. 49. Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 379. * His inscriptions have been found at the following :-... Uttaramallür Sixth year do. Eighth year ... Ukkal. Tenth year ... Uttaramallür 444 Fifteenth year ...  Kaveripākkam. Seventeenth year Uttaramailür. Twenty-third year 444

The inscriptions of this king are for the most part donative and do not furnish any historical details other than one record which refers to the destruction of Olakkur and the death of a hero. This record is on a slab set up near the village-munsiff's śāvadi at Olakkur and is a Vtragal of the period of Kampaperumāl who may be identified with Kampavarman. It records the death of a hero on the occasion of the destruction of the place in the later part of the ninth century.

Vayiramēghavarman.—Two stone records have been discovered at the Agastyēšvara temple at Poyyanūr in the Arkonam Taluk which mentions the name of a new king apparently belonging to the Pallava family dated in the second year. According to the late V. Venkayya, the name Vayiramēgha was a biruda assumed by Dantivarman, and is the same name occurring in the expressions Vayiramēghavāykkāl, etc., mentioned in the inscriptions. It has to be presumed that the name is more like Pallava than other dynastic names.

Chandraditya (No. 284 of 1916).—This is a record written in the Pallava-Grantha on a pillar in the rock-cut temple at Mēlaichēri in the Gingee Taluk of the South Arcot District. It states that the Śiva temple called Śri-Śikhari-Pallavēśvaram was excavated by Chandrāditya at Śimhapura (Śingavaram). Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil who discovered this inscription considers it probable that Chandrāditya was one of the names of Narasimhavarman I or Paramēsvaravarman I. This is, however, uncertain. There are in addition to these a few² inscriptions of this period belonging to Kāţtirai, Vijaya-Narasimhavarman and Vijaya-Īśvaravarman which need not be examined here as their position in the Pallava family is not clear.

1 No. 357 of 1909.

Nos. 3 of 1899, 119 of 1897, also Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 24, and vol. iv, p. 177.

With Nripatunga or Aparājita, the main line of the Pallava kings appears to have come to an end. But, however, a branch of them known as the Nolambas claiming descent from Trnayana-Pallava continued to exercise sovereignty at Nolambavādi—thirty-two thousand. This region comprised the modern Bellary District and portions of Mysore. Here, as the records show, the Nolamba chiefs continued in power as late as the thirteenth century A.D. The Hēmāvati Pillar inscription, which gives a genealogy of the Nolambas, mentions that they belonged to the Īsvaravamsa and enumerates the names of several kings of this line. These include Mangala, Simhapota, Charuponnēra, Nanniga, Anniga, and Dilipa. Brief accounts of these are given in L. Rice's Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions.

L. Rice, Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions, pp. 55-59.

CHAPTER X

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS OF PALLAVA RULE IN SOUTH INDIA

THE rule of the Pallava kings in the Tamil land for an unbroken period of nearly eight centuries resulted in stamping the administration of the country with a particular type of culture some of the aspects of which may now be briefly indicated. This is visible not only in the administration of government by the central and local authorities of the Pallava times (A.D. 200 to 900), but in practically every aspect of life in religion, literature, art, etc. In studying the Pallava administration, literary history, art and religious movements, we are unfortunately not in the possession of all the materials that would help us to reconstruct the history of the culture and civilization of the times. We are dependent for the most part on the inscriptions and copper-plate grants of this period as well as the few monuments that have survived. It is, therefore, not strange that the picture obtained by us has many gaps that have to be filled up by future discoveries.

Administration.—In the numerous copper-plate charters that have been discovered from time to time by the officers of the Government Epigraphy Department and by the labours of private scholars we obtain excellent glimpses of certain aspects of Pallava polity. From the earliest of these, namely, the Hirahadagalli copper-plates issued from the capital Kānchipuram we learn that already in the middle of the third century there prevailed a system of administration with the king at the top and the provincial governors and several departmental ministers in charge of parks, public baths, forests, reminding us in several details of the Mauryan and in some respects the Gupta administration. From the grant of the king made at his palace office in the head-quarters in Kānchīpura addressed to the provincial Viceroy at Amaravati 1 and several others which were issued in the following periods it is evident that during the early Pallava days the empire of the Pallavas was not unlike those of modern times divided into bigger and smaller divisions for the government of which officers of the state were appointed. The heads of departments were selected from among the members of the royal family such as the younger sons and distinguished members of the army. In Tondamandalam the distinct division * into twenty-four kottams appears to have been introduced

1 Liders, Ep. Ind., vol. x, App.

'From Kānchīpura the righteous supreme king (Dharmamahārāja) of the great king of the Pallavas, Sivaskandavarman, a Bharadvāja and an officer of Agnishtoma, Vājapēya and Asvamēdha sacrifices issues the following orders :-

We send greetings to the princes (Rajkumara), rulers of districts (Ratthika), chiefs of Madambas (customs officers), local prefects (Desadhikata) the free-holders of the various villages (Gama-gamabho-. ministers (Amachcha), guards (Arakhadikata), captains (Gumikas), Dūtikas (Messengers?), spies (Sanjarantakas) and warriors (Bhadamanusas).

These are enumerated in the Mackenzie MSS, as well as the Chingleput District Manual App. H. p. 438 and in The Tamils 1800 years ago and are as follows:

(1) Pulal-Köttam, (2) Ikküttu-Köttam, (3) Manavir-Köttam, (4) (1) Pulal-Koţiam, (2) Ikkuţtu-Koţiam, (3) Maņavir-Koţiam, (4) Sengăţţu-Koţtam. (5) Paiyūr-Koţtam. (6) Eyil-Koţtam of which the principal town was Kanchipuram. (7) Dāmal-Koţtam. (8) Uṣrukāţtu-Koṭtam, (9) Kalattūr-Koṭtam, (10) Sembūr-Koṭtam, (11) Ambur-Koṭtam, (12) Venkudrakoṭṭam, (13) Palakudra-Koṭtam, (14) Ilangāṭṭu-Koṭṭam, (15) Kaliyūr-Koṭṭam, (16) Sengarai-Koṭṭam, (17) Paduvūrkoṭṭam. (18) Kadikūr-Koṭṭam, (19) Sendirukkai-Koṭtam, (20) Kudravaṭṭāna-Koṭṭam, (21) Vēngada-Koṭṭam, (22) Velūr-Koṭṭam, (23) Settūr-Koṭṭam and (24) Puliyūr-Koṭṭam. This division of Toṇdamaṇḍalam, the Tundaka Rāṣhtṛa of the conner-plates, seems to have come into existence prior to Rashira of the copper-plates, seems to have come into existence prior to the period of the Pallava kings known to us from epigraphy, probably in the period of Chôla viceroyalty of Tondaman Ilam-Tirayanat Kānchi. Although these districts do not figure in the early copper-plates of the Pallavas they are rather frequent in the later stone inscriptions datable from the eighth and the ninth centuries. Pulal-Kottam with its subdivision figures in the Velurpalayam plates of the sixth year of Nandivarman III (S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 509) while Kajaṭṭūr-Kōṭṭam, Ikkāṭṭu-Kōṭṭam, and Paduvür-Köttam are mentioned in inscriptions dated in the fourteenth year of Nandivarman III, and the eleventh and the twenty-sixth years of Nripatungavarman, (Ep. Col. 349 of 1911, and 460 of 1905). Eyil-Köttam the division around Kanchipura also figures in the inscription dated in the fifteenth year of Nripatungavarman (Ep. Col. 461 of 1905). For the study of the ancient historical geography the references in the later Pallava inscriptions to these are very helpful. Some of the places such as Kalattur, Damal, and Urrukkadu which originally must have been important places after which the divisions were named have survived to the present day.

in an earlier period retained unaltered during the age of the Pallavas as we find them commonly figure in their inscriptions. The Rashtras which appear to be the equivalent of the mandala were thus parcelled out into the hands of the viceroys called Vishayikas while the smaller divisions such as the Koshtakas (kottam) and Grāmas, were placed in charge of dēśatikadas and vapittas. The ministers and rahasyādikadas (privy councillors) were examined and consulted on state matters by the sovereign. orders such as the one embodied in the Hirahadagalli plates were drawn by the king's private secretary. It is also learned from the early documents that there were officers in charge of the customs and the places or offices where they were collected were called mandapa and the officers who were entrusted with the collection of the customs were known as mandabis. There were also during this period special officers posted at bathing pools and tanks whose chief duties consisted in looking after the convenience of the bathers and their safety. They are called in this record as Tirthikas (Superintendents of bathing places). The persons mentioned by the name of the Gumikas who are taken by some scholars as captains appear to have been officers in charge of forests, a fact which shows that there was something like a forest department. The term neyka which resembles the Sanskrit name Nāyaka probably stands for the military officer whose status was next to those of Senapatis or Commanders of the army. All these clearly indicate an elaborate system of governmental organization which as already indicated above resemble the North Indian 1 rather than any southern system of administration that we know of.

The nature of village government at this period .- Whether or not the self-governing village corporation which, from the early Chola times as we are familiar with, prevailed in the early Pallava days we have not the material to judge from the ascertained facts at our disposal. But it appears that this later village organization with the characteristic features of committees, managing general village administration economic, financial, and judicial, existed in the later Pallava days for which we possess good evidence. That the system of government and administration was highly systematic, and even bureaucratic, we learn with the help of certain of the early Sanskrit charters mentioning the minute details of the boundaries of gifted lands and defining its situation-a fact which shows the efficiency of the land survey departments of the Pallavas. The Uruvapalli plates 1 give a typical example of such detailed-land survey. This is by no means the only instance of the elaborate arrangements and precautions taken in marking the village boundaries in the inscriptions. The Bahur plates belonging to the ninth century in recording a gift of the three villages near Pondicherry give similar details. 'According to the report submitted by the headman of the nadu the boundaries of the land granted (to the Bahur College) were as follows: Of the two villages of Vilangattangaduvanur and Śettuppākkam, the eastern boundary is to the west of the boundary of a forest and of the boundary of Nenmalippākkam; the southern boundary is to the north of the boundary of Nenmalippākkam, of the boundary of Nelväyippakkäm, and of the boundary of Urattür; the western boundary is to the east of the boundary of Mambakkam and of sixty rice-fields which form a Brahmadeya

The administration of Government in North India was conducted in accordance with a series of books some of which were pre-christian and others post-christian. The chief works in this series were Kautilya's Arthasastra, Kamandakā's Nītišāstra and Sukranīti.

Ind. Ant., vol. v, 1876, p. 50.

In this village there are 200 entire nivarianas. The limit of these nivarianas are:—On the west the boundary of the Keaduküra village, are the limit; on the south River Suprayoga is the limit; on the east the same is the limit; to the north by the south there is a rock on the side of the great road proceeding thence to the north, there is a tamarind tree, proceeding thence to where there is a rock on the road to the village of Kurupura, and to the village of Kunduküra; proceeding thence to the north there is a heap of rocks; proceeding thence to the north there is nock on the limit of the cultivated field of the Brahman as in the village and proceeding to the west, the limit is the edge of the boundaries of the village of Kondamuruvidur.

near Vilangattangaduvanur; and the northern boundary is to the south of Vagur. . . . It will be gathered from these records that the village and the central government of this period took the greatest pains in maintaining a detailed record of all the arable and waste lands, lakes, tanks, wells and rivers, rocks and even trees, for purposes of not only grants of land to temples and Brahmans, but also for revenue purposes.

Taxation and revenue.—From these we shall now proceed to the sources of taxation in the Pallava age that are mentioned in the records of the Pallava kings. We have no direct evidence of central or local finance during the early Chōla or Pallava times

¹ Dr. Hultzsch furnishes the following interesting plan indicating the relative position of the villages and boundaries referred to in the Tamil portion of the Bähur plates. Ep. Ind., vol. xviii. pp. 8-9.

Of these villages, Vahür survives as Bähur, while Vilangaṭṭangaduvanūr and Kirmanpatti are identical with Kaduvanūr and Kilmāmbākkam situate to the west and north-east of Bahur, an important locality south of Pondicherry.

as none of the large number of records that have come down to us were intended to set forth exhaustively the financial machinery for the enlightenment of the modern scholar; we can however infer from the list of exemptions stated in the various records of lands and other grants at our disposal what taxes and dues a village was ordinarily subjected to if it was other than a land gifted to Brahmans or a temple in which case the exemptions were secured to the donee. First may be noted some of the seignorial rights mentioned in the earliest Pallava copper-plate charters. The Hirahadagalli plates already mentioned are very interesting in this respect. This record states that the garden Chillerakodumkā the object of the grant is to be free from the taking of sweet and sour milk and sugar . . . from taxes . . . forced labour free from the payment of the oxen in succession, free from the taking of grass and the wood . . . from the taking of vegetables and flowers. . . . It also mentions the important particular towards the close of the grant where it says that with these and other immunities of the eighteen kinds it must be exempted. It is thus clear from this early Pallava record that about the first quarter of the third century Pallava kings had laid claim to not less than eighteen1 kinds of dues from the villagers (Ashtadasapariharas) which they ordinarily could claim except in cases of gifted lands. The Mayidavolu plates of the Pallava king Śiyaskandayarman 2 mentions among the immunities secured for the village of Viripara which was the object of the grant, freedom for the diggings of salt which shows that salt-manufacture was a royal monopoly, from the supply of bullocks in succession, the entrance of soldiers, the supply of boiled rice, etc. As we do not come across with some of these rights in the later records of the Pallavas it is probable that some of these rights fell out of use.

It is important to note that these were not at all in the nature of taxes but more of free-will offerings of first fruits by gardeners to kings and of supplies of means of transport to royal officers while on tour. Mr. Longhurst is therefore wrong when he remarks on this that 'it is thus obvious that the people were liable to all these taxes and imposts on the ordinary necessaries of life,' and that it clearly shows that in the fourth century at any rate there was no 'Golden Age' in Southern India. (An. Rep. of the Arch. Dep. of Southern Circle 1918-1919, Part II, p. 21.)

2 Ep. Ind., vol. vi. pp. 88 ff.

Passing on from the days of the early Pallavas to that of the later Pallavas, we notice in the Sanskrit charters of Paramēśvaravarman I. Nandivarman Pallavamalla and that of his grandson Nandivarman III more details regarding the rights of the Pallava kings of the period to other items of taxes and duties, are available. From a study of the Tamil portions of the Kaśākkudi, Kūram, the Tandantöttam, Vēlūrpālayam and the Bahur plates we learn that during this period there were, what have been called profession-taxes but are really excise on local products, on oil mill-owners, potters, goldsmiths, toddydrawers, as well as duties on areca-nuts exposed for sale and sold in the markets, duty on looms, presents on the occasion of new marriages and royalty on the manufacture of salt. Some of these such as the Ilampütchi and Puthāli are inexplicable. Good specimens of this royal exemption order are contained in the Tamil portion of the Tandantottam plates dated in the fifty-eighth year of Nandivarman II. Pallavamalla: the immunities evidently indicate some of the taxes which were customary:-

'No tax of any kind such as duty on oil-press and looms, Ulaviyaküli, the fee on marriages, ürettu fee on potters, tattukäyam, duty on toddy-drawers and shepherds, fee on stalls, brokerage fee, tirumugakkänam, royalty paid for the manufacture of salt, the good cow, the good bull, vattināli, fee on basket of grain exposed for sale in the market, areca-nuts exposed for sale in the shops, Budanāļi, and others which the king could take and enjoy. Damanagam may be planted; mansions and large edifices may be built of burnt bricks; reservoirs and wells may be sunk; cocoanut trees may be planted in groves; and large oil-presses may be used. . . . 1

Of these terms some are obscure. Pütchi seems to mean a kind of due and Ilampütchi might mean a duty on Ilavar or toddy drawers. Tirumugakkanam apparently means a fee for the messenger bringing royal messages or orders. Ulaviyakküli has been taken to mean the bire for well-diggers. The terms putali kannittukanam, arikoli, nedum parai and Bretiu are not clear.

. The emperor in these records is called Mahārāja and Dharmamahārāja. In the Gupta inscriptions of North India also, the emperor is called Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara. In the Gupta Government the emperor is the centre of a group of subordinate kings. The territory of the empire was called a Raiva in the Gupta inscriptions as well as Rashtra, and Desa and Mandala which occur also in the Pallava inscriptions. The territories in the Pallava Empire are divided in the records into Kottams and Nadus on the lines of the Gupta administration where they are similarly divided into Bhukti. Vishava, and Grama. There is a close resemblance between the sources of taxation and revenue between the early Pallava records and Gupta inscriptions. These may be gathered from the inscriptions recording various grants. These include several items such as Uparikara, Vāta Bhūta, Hiranya. Adeva, etc. Several of the Gupta inscriptions as well as Pallava inscriptions indicate negatively the obligations imposed by the state. Several of the Gupta Inscriptions, may be compared with portions of the Pallava records dealing with exemption from taxes.2

About the beginning of the ninth century stone inscriptions of the Pallavas become abundant and in these we find interesting particulars of the activity of the village Sabhas all over the empire particularly in the Chingleput District. A perusal of the stone records of this period relating to these dated in the years of the later Pallava kings, Nandivarman II, Dantivarman, Nandivarman III and Aparājita shows that the following figure among the large numbers of places that enjoyed self-governing village Sabhās: Ādambākkam,

¹ S. J. J., vol. ii, pp. 539-31.

³ It (the village rendered free) is not to pay taxes; it is not to be entered by the regular troops or by the umbrella bearers; it does not carry with it the right to cows and bulls in succession of production, or to the abundance of flowers and milk, or to the pasturage, hides, and charcoal, or to the mines for the purchase of salt in a moist state . . . (F. G. I., p. 242.)

Avaninārāyaņachaturvēdimangalam (Kaveripakkam), Maņali, Tiruvorriyur, Kuram, Perumunaiyur, Tiruviprambedu, Anbil Venkunram, Uttaramallur, Perunguli, Tirukoilur, and Ukkal. An account of the activities of these village assemblies in repairing tanks, accepting deposits for charitable purposes and other works has come down to us.

The Assemblies .- Though we know the existence of the village assemblies in the various parts of the Pallava empire we do not know the nature of the rules that regulated their constitution and working, their exact sphere of action and the relation of this to the central government. Inscriptions copied in the Chingleput District alone indicate that during the ninth century different types of village assemblies carried on their work. One of the most important of these was called the Sabha. These were usually to be found in Brahmadeva villages granted to the Brahmanas and therefore were almost entirely run by the Brahmans. The rules laid down in the Uttaramallur inscription1 for the membership of the village assemblies applies in all probability to such Sabhās. A recently discovered inscription2 dated in the thirty-first year of Maransadaiyan throws some light on some of the rules of membership of the village Sabhās which differ from all those known till now. (i) It is stated in this record that of the children of the shareholders in the villages, only one who is well versed in the Mantra-Brahmana and one Dharma, and well-behaved, may be on the village assembly and only one of similar qualifications may be in the assembly for a share purchased, received as present, or acquired by him as Stridhana; (ii) that shares purchased, presented, or acquired as Stridhana could entitle one if at all, only to a full membership in the assembly, and in no case will quarter or half or three-quarter of the membership be recognized; (iii) that those who purchase shares should elect only such men to represent their share in the assembly as have critically studied a whole Veda with their parisishtas; (iv) that those who do not possess full membership as laid down by Rule II cannot stand on any committee for the management of the village affairs; (v) that those who satisfy the prescribed conditions should in no case persistently oppose the proceedings of the assembly, by saying nay, nay, to every proposal brought up before the assembly; (vi) those who do this together with their supporters will pay a fine 1 of five kāšu on each item in which they have so behaved and still continue to submit to the same rules.2

A,S.R. for 1904-5, pp. 13-145. * M.E.R. for 1913, para 23.

The activities of the Sabhas were varied in character and they dealt with all important aspects of village life. From the Pallava inscriptions alone we gather that these Sabhas looked after the temple and its administration, and received the endowments made on behalf of temple services. In addition to this many of these Sabhas looked after the supervision and repairs to the village tanks which were brought into existence with considerable labour at the instance of the Pallava kings. Some of these immense irrigational tanks which must have engaged the skilled labour of a vast body of men have survived to our own times. These include, the Parames. vara Tatāka in Kūram near Kāñchīpuram, the Mahēndra Tatāka in Mahēndravādi not far from Arkonam, Tirayanēri. Vayiramēga Tatāka in Uttaramallūr, in the Madurantakam Taluk, Chitramegha Tatāka, Veljeri and probably the large tank at Mamandur which now irrigates a large area. The irrigation channels figuring in the Pallava inscriptions include the Perumbidugu Väykkäl, the channel cut from the Pälär to Küram and the Vayiramēga Väykkäl, both of which probably owe their origin to the Pallava kings bearing these surnames. The supervision and upkeep of these tanks and channels must have entailed a great deal of labour and attention on the part of the village Sabhas many of which had a separate Tank Supervision Committee as is clear from one of the later inscriptions. The great tank at Uttaramallür owes its origin to one of the Pallava kings named Vayiramēgan and figures frequently in the inscriptions relating to the activities of the Uttaramallür Sabhā during the reign of Dantivarman and Vijaya Kampavarman.

¹ The last provision is rather ingenious in as much as it shows that as early as the ninth century the necessity to deal with the refractory and obstructionist tactics had been felt though the safeguard does not appeal to the modern mind.

² Fuller details are available in Chola inscriptions such as those of Parāntaka and his successors when the village assemblies not only managed all local affairs such as the collection of revenue, upkeep of tanks and irrigation canals, administration of temples but also looked after the local judicial administration, the education religious and secular of the young as well as the adult, and maintenance of hospitals for the diseased. The principle of election and the ballot hox became very popular and local administration was conducted very efficiently. The annual change of office-bearers in the various committees extended to every villager the opportunity of getting acquainted with practical administration.

The other important work of the village Sabhās of the Pallava age was the management of temple property and service. The temple appears to have played an important role in the age of the Pallavas and must have attracted large numbers of people for various purposes. A close study of the inscriptions of this period shows that the Pallava kings took a great deal of interest in the building of these temples as well as their proper upkeep. These are scattered all over the Tamil districts, some of the most beautiful and important ones being found at the capital of the kingdom, Kanchipuram. The inscriptions at the Rajasimhēśvara and at the Vaikuntaperumāl temples bear ample testimony to the great devotion of the Pallava kings but details of their management in those days are not available. It is quite probable that their management was entrusted to the temple committee of the city council in the days of Rajasimha and Paramesvarayarman. In the actual management of the temple administration which involved the looking after of lands, appointment of contractors for the dayto-day supply of rice, ghee, flowers, etc., defalcations sometimes occurred even leading to the reduction in the actual offering to the deity. One such instance is recorded in the Triplicane inscription of Dantivarman, dated in the twelfth year of his reign. The temple management (kulankilār) having mortgaged one of the temple fields in Karumārachēri, the offering to the God fell short. This was restored however by the pious offices of one Pugaltunai-Vissiyarāyan who redeemed the mortgaged field.

No. 84 of 1898, dated in the twenty-first year of Kampavarman mentions the name of this Committee as the Eri-Variya-Perumakkal.
*Ep. Col., No. 74 of 1898, dated in the ninth year of Dantiyarman; and Ep. Col., No. 61 of 1898, dated in the twenty-first year of the same king and Ep. Col., No. 84 of 1898, of Kampavarman.

Literature during the Pallava Age .- Another important benefit of the Pallava rule in South-India was the impetus given to literature, particularly Sanskrit. The age of the Pallayas is also the period of the celebrated movements of the Alvars and the Adiyars which so much revolutionized the religious outlook of the people at that time. The Pallava kings on account partly of their having come from the north had distinct leanings from the beginning for Sanskrit literature and all their early charters with the exception of a few are written in Sanskrit. The prasasti portions in the later copperplate charters such as the Kāśakkudi plates of Nandivarman Pallavamalla which furnish a historical account of the family of the donor appear to have been written by poets of considerable ability who adorned the contemporary Pallaya court. It is only in the later Pallava period that a Tamil portion came to be added to the charters. The prasasti portions as well as the descriptive accounts (such as those of the battle of Peruvalanallur)2 of some of the plates compare very favourably with some of the best Sanskrit style of the classical kavis. We do not unfortunately possess any means whereby the names of the early Sanskrit poets of the Pallava kings before Simhavishnu could be gathered. There is, however, no doubt whatever that Kanchipuram almost from the beginning of the Pallava rule was a centre of Sanskrit learning. The city appears to have been famous as a seat of Sanskrit learning as early as the second century B.C.; Patanjali discusses the derivation of the word Triplicane inscription of Dantivarman, Ep. Ind., vol. viii, pp. 291 ff.

 Kiram plates; S. I. I., vol. i, p. 153.

Kānchīpuraka, possibly because it was famous for Sanskrit learning even then. Even in the Sangam age it will be remembered that Aravana Adigal taught Buddhistic philosophy at this place and at a subsequent period Dignaga the logician who is believed to have been the author of Nyāyapravēša spent considerable time at Kanchi and was perhaps a product of mediæval Pallava culture. Later, Mayūra Śarman, the progenitor of the Kadamba family, had to proceed to this place for the completion of the Vedic studies. It is not surprising therefore that Simhavishnu about the close of the sixth century when he heard of Bhāravi staying with Durvinīta, the Western Ganga king, invited him to his court according to the Avantisundarikathāsāra.1 It is by no means unlikely, that Kirtarjuniya the well-known work of this poet was composed about this period.

Of Mahendravarman I, the illustrious son and successor of Simhavishnu, more is known. His great command of Sanskrit is fully seen in his work Mattavilasa Prahasana which has survived to our times. This has already been noticed while dealing with this king in an earlier chapter. The great musical inscription at Kudumiyamalai about the same period, as well as the beautiful Sanskrit compositions at the Trichinopoly rockcut temple and elsewhere are also indicative of the refined taste for Sanskrit composition at this period. It was during the reign of one of his successors that Dandin, the celebrated savant, spent considerable time in the Pallava court, even paying a visit to the wonderful sculptures of Mahāmallapuram. It is not improbable that this was towards the close of the seventh century A.D. The Avantisundarikathasara contains interesting details of an earlier sojourn of Dandin in the south, while quite young, when Kanchipuram was in the throes of foreign invasion and siege by the Chälukyas, when the citizens of the place had to desert the city temporarily. Dandin returned to Kanchi long after and in all probability flourished for long at the Pallava court. Matridatta, a poet and scholar and Rama Sarman, also figure among the friends of Dandin and were perhaps associated with him at Kanchipuram. The names of Sanskrit poets at the Pallava court during this period other than these are not known. It is held by some scholars that the Sanskrit plays published recently in Trivandrum as Bhasa's were abridgements made during this period of earlier works of Bhasa and Śūdraka for being staged at the Pallava court. It has been suggested by Mr. L. D. Barnett that these are the works of an anonymous author in the court of the Pandyan King Rajasimha.1 But as we have got evidence that the Pallava court was the great centre of Sanskrit learning during this period it seems to be more correct to regard that the dramas referred to above were intended to be staged at the Pallava court as is evident from the colophons of some of these plays.2 It has been presumed also that the work was composed at Kanchi from the occurrence of the name of Dantivarman in the manuscripts of Mudrarākshasa found in Malabar in the last benedictory verses.

¹ See App. Avantisundarikathāsāra.

The Tevaram and the Nalayira Prabandham hymns were also produced during the age of the Pallava monarchs. We have already seen that Appar, the first of the Tevaram hymnists was the well-known contemporary of Mahendravarman I who was converted to Saivism by him. His hymns in the Tevaram collection number over 3000 and are full of Sanskrit expressions and Brahmanical culture and tradition. Tiruñana-Sambandar was his younger contemporary and flourished during the reign of Narasimhavarman I. During his period Saivism was very much in the ascendant and Siva temples were very numerous in South India. According to the Periyapuranam account he is said to have succeeded in converting Nedumāran the contemporary Pandyan King to Saivism after a successful disputation with the Samanas who were very powerful at this period at Madura. His poems in the Tevaram number nearly 4000. Sundarar the last of the sixty-three Saiva saints appears to have lived in the ninth century and mentions Appar and Sambandar who preceded him. His Tiruttondatokai was the basis on which Nambiyandar Nambi composed his Andādi and these two formed the main sources of Śēkkijār for writing the Periyapurānam. Sundanar's hymns amount to eleven hundreds nearly in the Tevaram.

¹ J.R.A.S. for 1919, p. 233.

इमां सागरपर्यन्तां हिमबद्धिन्ध्यकुण्डलाम् । पृथ्वोमेकातपत्रद्वा राजसिंहः प्रशास्तनः॥

About the age of Mănikkavāśagar the well-known author of Tiruvāśakam and Tirukkovai, there exists some doubt. According to some Tamil scholars he preceded the three Tevāram hymnists. But as he clearly refers to the Pandyan King Varaguna in his works there cannot be any doubt that he flourished in the earlier half of the ninth century. His Tiruvāśakam is a very popular work and celebrates Śiva's miracles in a simple and attractive style. His activities were confined to Chidambaram and its adjoining places and he does not appear to have come into active contact with the Pallavas.

Of the twelve Vaishnava saints known as the Alvars some of whom flourished during the Pallava age the first four-Pēyāļvār, Budattāļvār, Poygaiāļvār and Tirumališaiāļvār, appear to have been contemporaries and lived at a time before the advent of the Pallavas to Kanchipuram. Tradition however records that Tirumalisai was a contemporary of one of the Pallava kings, perhaps Tondaman-Ilamtiraiyan. Of the others Tirumangajajvar is the most important and has already been referred in a previous chapter. There is a credible Vaishnava tradition that he held a successful disputation with the Śaiva saint Tiruñana-Sambandar. If this can be relied on he should have lived an exceptionally long period of time. His work exceeds that of any other Alvar except Nammālyār and his peregrinations were spread all over South India. His great Pallava contemporary was Nandivarman Pallavamalla who reigned for an exceptionally long period of sixty-five vears. This Alvar unlike the other Alvars makes frequent mention of contemporary political occurrences including the martial exploits of the Pallava King referred to above. One of his verses contains an allusion to the repulse of the Chālukyan King which is corroborated by inscriptions. The war implements of the Pallavas as well as their other insignia also find mention in his hymns. The other Ālvārs, such as Kulašēkhara, Nammāļvār, Periyāļvār, Āndāl, etc., did not flourish in Tondamandalam and did not come into contact with the Pallava Kings.

The origin and evolution of Pallava art and architecture does not properly belong to this work and may be studied elsewhere.1 It may be however noted here that it is a mistake to suppose that temples did not exist in South India before the Pallava age, for mention is made of them in early Sangam works. They were then built only of wood and perishable material and consequently have not survived. The earliest inscriptional mention, in a Pallava record, of a temple occurs in the grant of Charudevi which evidences a donation of land to the temple of Nārāyana at Dālūrā early in the fourth century. During the reign of Mahendrayarman I, a commencement was made 4 in the art of monolithic temple building. The first specimens were all of them excavations of hillsides into temples such as those at Trichinopoly, Vallam and Māmandūr, modelled after the caves at Undavalli. A later development was from the cave temples to the Rathas like those of Mahäbalipuram. From these, in due course of evolution, came structural temples, among the earliest and best known of which are the Shore-temple at the Seven Pagodas, the Kailasanatha temple at Kanchi and at Panamalai. The evolution continued in the days of subsequent Pallava kings till the rise of what is a distinct Chola style.

According to Prof. Jouvean Dubreuil.

¹ See the works of Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil and Mr. Longhurst.

APPENDIX A

A CHRONOLOGICAL INDEX OF PALLAVA INSCRIPTIONS

 Nasik Buddhist Inscription of Śri-Pulumäyi. Ep. Ind., vol. viii, pp. 60ff.

The inscription records in Prakrit, the gift of a cow to the community of monks, by Queen Gotami Balaśri, mother of Gotamiputrasatakarni, king of Aśmaka, Mulika, etc., who destroyed the Śakas, Yavanas, and the Pahlavas. A village was granted by the queen's grandson for the embellishment of the cave.

2. Junagadh Rock Inscription of Rudradaman. Ep. La.

vol. viii, pp. 36ff.

Sanskrit fragment. Records the restoration of lake Sudarsana, situated at some distance from Girinagara (Girnar). The work was executed by Suvisāka, the son of Kulaipa, and a Pahlava, who had been appointed to rule the whole of Ānarta and Surāshtra. He is described as having been able, patient, not wavering, not arrogant, upright, and by his good government and proper views and dealings in things temporal and spiritual, to have increased the attachment of the people and the spiritual fame and glory of his master.

 The Myākadoni Inscription of Pulumāvi. Ep. Ind., vol. xiv, p. 153. Also Rep. for Epig., Madras, for 1915-16, part ii, p. 112. Insc. No. 509, App. B.

Prakrit record. This is dated in the eighth year of the Andhra king Śri-Pulumāvi, king of the Sātavāhana (family) and records the sinking of a reservoir by a resident of Vēpūraka, belonging to the Captain-Kumāradatta, in the country of Sātavāhani-Āhāra which belonged to the (great general) Mahāsēnāpati-Khandanaga (Skandanaga). This inscription important in so far as it establishes that the sway of the Satavahanas extended to the south of the Krishna.

Mayidavolu plates of Šivaskandavarman. Hultzsch. Ep.

Ind., vol. vi. p. 84.

Eight copper-plates with a seal bearing in relief a bull and the legend Sivaskandavarmana. The language is Prakrit, dialect different from literary Páli, and the alphabet is considered an epigraphical curiosity.

The grant was issued by the heir-apparent (Yuvamaharaja) Śivaskandavarman of the Bhāradvāja-gōtra and of the Pallava family, and records the gift of a village (Viripara) to two Brahmans. The village is said to have belonged to Andhrapatha and has not been identified. The record is dated in the fifth tithi, of the sixth fortnight of summer, in the tenth year of the reign of Sivaskandavarman's predecessor. The immunities secured by the village included, freedom from the diggings for sait, the supply of bullocks, in succession, the entrance of the soldiers, cots and dwellings.

Hirahadagalli plates of Sivaskandavarman. Bühler, 5. Ep. Ind., vol. i, p. 5. Final corrections by Hultzsch, Ibid., vol. vi, p. 88.

Bight plates from Hirahadagalli, in the Bellari District. Prakrit. Records that the Pallava king Sivaskandavarman of Kānchi, who belonged to the Bharadvajagotra and is said to have performed Agnishioma, Vajapeya and Asvamedha sacrifices, confirmed and enlarged in the eighth year of his reign a grant made formerly by the great king, the Lord-Bappa (his father), to certain Brahmans residing at Apitti, and who are described as bhojakas, of the village of Chillarekakodumka, in the Satahanirattha. The gift consisted of a garden in the above village, the income of which was to be divided in a specified manner.

The writer of the grant was the Privy-Councillor—(Rahasadhikata) Bhatti-Śarman. Among the other officials mentioned in this record are the Lords of Provinces, Royal Princes, Rulers of Districts, CustomHouse Officers, Prefects of countries, Forest-officials, Sergeants, roaming spies, and others.

 British Museum plates of Charudevi. Noticed by Fleet. Ind. Ant., vol. ix, pp. 100ff. Ep. Ind., vol. vi, p. 88, No. 10. Final correction by Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. viii, p. 143.

The original copper-plates secured by Sir Walter Elliot, are now in the British Museum. Language is mostly in Prakrit prose and partly in Sanskrit verse. The seal contains a standing animal, apparently a bull, the crest of the Pallavas.

The grant is dated in some year of Vijayaskandavarman (illegible). It records an order by the Queen Regent in behalf of the heir-apparent Vijaya-Buddhavarman who is described as a Pallava and affiliated to Bhāradvāja-gatra. Dr. Huitzsch has read the name of the queen as Chārudēvi and that of the prince whose mother she claims to have been as Buddh (yan)kura. The grant supplies the genealogical order Mah. Vijayaskandavarman, his son Yuvamahārāja Vijaya Buddhavarman and his son Buddhyańkura.

The object of the grant is to register a gift of land made by Charudevi consisting of a field near the king's tank to Narayana of the Kulimahataraka temple, at Dalura, The village authorities were required to exempt the field from all immunities.

 Allahabad Pillar Inscription of Samudragupta. Fleet, Cor. Insc., Ind., vol. iii, pp. 1-17.

The inscription is written in an Asokan sandstone pillar.

The characters belong to the Gupta alphabet, the language is partly Sanskrit prose and partly verse.

The record is undated. It gives abundant details as regards the conquests of Samudragupta, the divisions and kings of India in the fourth century A.D. Among the southern kings that Samudragupta conquered and released, the record mentions Mahendra of Kosala, Vyāgrarāja of Mahākāntara, Maņtarāja of Kaurāļa, Mahēndra of Paishţāpura, Svāmidatta of Koţţūra on the hill, Damana of Erandapalla, Vishnugopa of Kañchi, Nilaraja of Avamukta, Hastivarman of Vëngi, Ugrasëna of Palakka, Kubhëra of Devarashtra, Danamjaya of Kausthalapura, and all other kings of the region of the south. The inscription proves that Vishnugopa of Kānchī, one of the several southern kings defeated by Samudragupta, flourished in the second quarter of the fourth century A.D.

Chendalür plates of Kumāravishņu II. Ep. Ind., vol.

viii, p. 233.

Five copper-plates from Chendalur in the Ongole Taluk of the Nellore District.

Language is Sanskrit prose and the alphabets closely resemble those of Pikira, Uruvappalli, and Mangalur plates. The inscription is an edict issued from Kanchipura in the second year of the reign of the Pallava-Maharāja Kumāravishņu (II) who is described as the son of Mah. Buddhavarman, the grandson of Mah. Kumāravishņu (1), and the great-grandson of Mah. Skandavarman. The object of the grant is to register the gift of the king to a Brahman in the village of Chendalura in Kavichakārabhoga, a subdivision of the district of Karmankarashtra. Of the localities mentioned in the record Kanchipuram is the well-known capital of the Pallavas and Chendalür a village in the Nellore District.

Omgodu plates of Vijayaskandavarman (II). H. K. 9. Sastri, Ep. Ind., vol. xv, pp. 249ff.

Four copper-plates. Language, Sanskrit characters belonging to the southern class. The grant is addressed from the Royal Camp the victorious Tāmbrāpasthāna. The record mentions in chronological order Mah. Kumāravishņu, who is described as a Pallava king of the Bhāradvāja gōtra and a performer of the Aśvamēdha sacrifice, his son Mah. Skandavarman who acquired his kingdom by his own prowess, his son Vīravarman victorious in many battles and his son Vīravarman victorious in many battles and his son Vījayaskandavarman, the donor. The grant conveys an order to the officers of Otingodu and the residents that the village was given as a Sātvika gift with the eighteen kinds of exemptions to Gōlašarman of the Kašyapa-gotra, a student of two Vēdas, and well versed in the six Angas. The grant was engraved in the victorious year 33, on the thirteenth day of the third fortnight of winter.

 Darśi copper-plate fragment. Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. i. p. 397.

Language and script: Same as above. The grant consists of the beginning of a Sanskrit inscription engraved on one side of a copper-plate. The name of the donor of the plate is lost but the record gives the name of his great-grandfather —Śrī Vīrakōrchavarman—the laudatory verses attributed to him agreeing literally with those attributed to the Pallava kings Skandavarman I and Skandavarman II. The king's order was addressed from Vijaya-Daśanapura.

11. Pikira Grant of Simhavarman, Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. viii, p. 159.

Five copper-plates with seal much worn but bearing in relief an animal perhaps the bull. Language is Sanskrit prose excepting the final imprecatory verses. The alphabet closely resembles the Uruvappalli plates.

The record opens with an invocation to Vishnu (Bhagavat) and proceeds to record the grant of a village named Pikīra in the district of Mundarāshtra. It is dated in the fifth year of the reign of Mah. Simhavarman and issued from the camp at Mēnmātūra, in the Nellore District. Mah. Simhavarman, the donor is described as the son of Yuva Mah. Vishnugopa, the grandson of Mah. Skandavarman (II) and the great-grandson of Mah. Viravarman. The term Yuva-mahārāja which is prefixed to Vishnugopa in the present grant as well as in the Uruvappalli grant suggests that he probably never ruled.

12. Mangalur Grant of Simhavarman. Fleet, Ind. Ant., vol. v, p. 154.

Six copper-plates. Language, Sanskrit in the southern characters. The grant which was issued from Dasanapura registers the gift of the village of Mangadūr, situated in the country of Vengorāshtra to certain Brahmans. The record is dated in the eighth year of the reign of Simhavarman who is stated to have been the great-grandson of Mah. Śri-Vīravarman, the grandson of Mah. Skandavarman. Dr. Fleet considered that Simhavarman was an elder brother of Yuva Mahārāja Vishnugōpa one of whose grants is dated in the eleventh year of Simhavarman's reign.

Uruvappalli Grant of Yuva Mah. Vishnugopavarman.
 Fleet, Ind. Ant., vol. v., p. 50. Also the Bombay

Gazetteer, part ii, p. 320.

Language and characters same as above. The grant was issued from Palakkada and is dated in the eleventh year of Mah. Simhavarman. It mentions in genealogical order the names of four kings, Mah. Śrī Skandavarman, his son Mah. Śrīvīravarman, his son Mah. Skandavarman, and his son Yuva Mah. Vishnugōpavarman the donor who is described as the most divine worshipper of the divine one (Paramahhāgavata). The object of the grant is to register a gift of 200 nivartanas of land in the village of Uruvappalli in the Mundarāshtra country to the temple of God Vishnuhāra established by Senāpati Vishnuvarman at the village of Kundukura. A minute description of the boundaries of the land is furnished.

14. Örigödu Plates of Simhavarman II. H. K. Sastri, Ep. Ind., vol. xiv, p. 252; also Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1916, Pt. ii. p. 113.

Five copper-plates on a ring with no seal. Sanskrit language: characters same. The object of the grant is to register a gift of the village of Ömgödu in Karmarāshtra to a certain Dēvasarman, who was a resident of Kendur and belonged to Kasyapagotra. The grant was made in the fourth year of the reign, in the month of Vaisakha Suklapaksha Panchami. It is taken as having been given on the occasion of an eclipse. The donor Simhavarman (II) is stated to have been the son of Yuva Maharaja Vishnugopa, grandson of Mah. Skandavarman, and the greatgrandson of Mah. Virayarman.

15. Udayendiram plates (spurious) of Nandivarman. Kielhorn, Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 142; also Ind. Ant., vol. iii, p. 167.

Three copper-plates with a circular seal containing in bas-relief a standing bull. Language, Sanskrit in the southern script.

The donor of the inscription is said to have been a devout worshipper of Vishnu and the law-abiding Mahārāja Nandivarman of the Bhāradvājagotra. He is said to have been the son of Mah. Skandavarman, the grandson of Mah. Simhavarman, and the greatgrandson of Mah. Skandavarman. It registers the order of the King conveyed from Vijaya-Kanchipura recording a gift of the village of Kanchivayil, and four pieces of forest land situated in the district of Adayāra to a Brahman inhabitant of Kānchivāyil named Kulasarman. The grant was issued in the fifth lunar day of Vaisakha in the first year of the reign. The Tamil endorsement on the first plate which is dated in the twenty-sixth year of Madiraikonda-Ko-Parakesari records the amalgamation of two villages.

Chura Plates of Vijava-Vishnugopavarman. Mad. Ep. 16. Rep. for 1914, part ii. p. 82.

Sanskrit and Telugu. This record which is not dated, was issued from Vijayapālotkata and registers a grant of land by the donor Vijaya-Vishnugopavarman, to a certain Chasmisarman of the Kasvabagatra and a resident of Kundur. According to this record Vijaya-Vishnugopavarman was the son of Simhavarman, grandson of Mah. Vishnugopayarman and the greatgrandson of Skandavarman.

17. Tälgunda Pillar Inscription of Kakutsthavarman. Bühler, Ind. Ant., vol. xxv, p. 27; Fleet, Dynasties, pp. 286 ff: Rice, Ep. Carn., vol. vii, p. 200: Kielhorn, Eb. Ind., vol. viii, pp. 24 ff.

The inscription which was discovered by L. Rice is written in Sanskrit in the box-headed variety of the Southern characters. It relates to the excavation of a tank near an ancient Siva temple at Sthanukundur, commenced by the Kadamba king Kakutsthavarman and completed by his son Santivarman. The author of the record which is written in high Kavya style was Kubia. The greater portion of this inscription is devoted to an account of the early kings of Kadamba dynasty which is interesting for the information it gives of the relation of the Kadambas with the Pallava kings, the Banas, etc. According to the inscription the Kadambas were a Brahman family belonging to the Manavyasagotra and descended from' Harttiputra. In this family was born Mayurasarman who went to Kānchi in order to study and there was involved in a quarrel with the Pallava rulers. He took up arms against them and after a prolonged struggle, the kings of Kanchi conferred upon him the territory between Amararnava and Prēmāra. He was succeeded by his son Kangayarman, his son Bhagiratha, and his two sons Raghu and Kakutsthavarman. His successor was Santivarman during whose reign this record was composed.

 The Penugonda Plates of Madhava II. Rice, Ep. Ind., vol. xiv, pp. 331 ff. also Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1914, p. 83, para 3.

Old type of Kannada Characters. (Telugu-Canarese). The plates mention in order Konkanivarma Dharma-Mahādhirāja of the Kanvayanagotra, his son Mādhava Mahādhirāja I, who was an able exponent of the science of polity, his son Āryavarman who is described to have been 'duly installed on the throne by Simhavarma-Mahārāja, the lord of the prosperous Pallava family' and his son Mādhava Mahādhirāja II who was duly installed on the throne by the illustrious Pallava king Skandavarman. The object of the grant is to register sixty-five paddy-fields in Paruvivishaya to Kumāra-Śarman of the Valsagotra.

Exception has been taken by Dr. Fleet to this copperplate grant. He considers them genuine as against others and the mention of the contemporaneous Pallava kings Simhavarma-Mahārāja and Skandavarma-Mahārāja is important. It is probable that they were related as father and son.

Siyamangalam Cave Inscription of Mahendravarman.
 Madras. Ep. Coll., No. 67 of 1900; Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. vi, No. 32, p. 319.

This inscription is engraved on the rock-cut pillars in the Siva temple called Sthambesvara, in the village of Siyamangalam, Wandiwash Taluk, North Arcot District. It consists of a single Sanskrit verse written in an archaic alphabet resembling the cave inscriptions at Trichinopoly and Mahendravadi, and records the fact that the temple called Avanibhajana-Pallavesvara was caused to be excavated by a king called Lalitankura who has been identified with Mahendravarman 1 of the Pallava kings.

 Vallam Cave Inscription of Mahēndrapötarāja. Hultzsch. S.I.I., vol. ii, part iii, pp. 34ff.

This inscription, written in archaic Tamil, is engraved on the upper portions of the doorpillars of the Vasantesvara temple at Vallam, near Chingleput, It records that one Vasantapriyaraja, the servant of Pahappidugu alias Lalitankuran, Satrumallan, Gunabharan, Mahendrapota-Raja caused the temple to be executed. The surnames belong to Mahendravarman I.

 Mahendravädi Inscription of Gunabhara. Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. iv, pp. 152ff.

This inscription is written in the same archaic Pallava alphabet as the Trichinopoly rock inscription and consists of a single Sanskrit verse in the kokilaka metre, inscribed on the pilaster on the left end of the facade in the rock-cut temple here. It records the fact that Gunabhara caused the temple to be cut out of the rock and that it was dedicated to Vishnu and bore the name Mahendra Vishnugʻtiha, i.e. the Vishnu temple of Mahendra, that it stood on the bank of the Mahendratataka, i.e. the tank of Mahendra and that it was situated in Mahendrapura, the City of Mahendra. Mahendrapura is probably identical with Mahendravadi and Gunabhara with Mahendravadi varman I.

 Trichinopoly Cave Inscriptions of Mahendra. Hultzsch, S.I.I., vol. i, pp. 28-30.

Two inscriptions in Sanskrit in archaic Pallava-Grantha characters on two pillars in the upper cave of the Rock at Trichinopoly record that a king called Gunabhara, who bore the birudas, Purushottama, Satyasamdha and Satrumalla, constructed a temple on the top of the mountain and placed in it a linga and a statue of himself. As the Käveri is here called 'the beloved of the Pallavas' and as the inscription is found in the Chöla territory it is clear that the Pallavas had extended their dominions during this period to the region of the Kāvēri.

 Mandagappattu Inscription of Vichitrachitta. Jouveau-Dubreuil, Conjeevaram Insc. of Mahēndravarman, p. 2. Ep. Ind., vol. xvii, p. 14.

The record is written in the Pallava-Grantha characters of the seventh century A.D., and is a Sanskrit verse in the Giti metre. It is somewhat damaged and can be read only with difficulty. It states that King Vichitrachitta caused to be constructed a temple for Brahma, Iśvara and Vishmu, without the use of bricks, timber, metals and mortar. Vichitrachitta is a surname of Mahēndravarman I.

 Dalavanur Cave Inscription of Narendra. Huitzsch, Ep. Ind. vol. xii, p. 225; Ep. Col., Nos. 50 and 51 of 1905.

Sanskrit and Tamil. The inscriptions are written on a pillar in a rock-cut cave at Dalavānūr in the Tindivanam Taluk of the South Arcot District. The first inscription consists of a single Sanskrit sloka which states that the cave-temple containing the inscription was executed at the order of Satrumalla and named Satrumallēsvarālaya. The second is divided into two sections of which one is Tamil verse and the other prose, and records the same fact. The name of the locality is stated to be Venpaţtu. Narēndra is only a surname of Pallava Mahēndravarman I and the reference to the donor as Tondaiyamtārvēndan confirms this surmise.

 Pallavaram Inscription of Mahēndravikrama. Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1909, p. 75.

This inscription written on the beams of the upper and lower verandahs of the cave temple at Pallavaram in archaic Pallava-grantha-characters. Fragment. It gives a list of birudas of which some are Sanskrit, others Telugu. Of these Śri-Mahēndravikrama, Mattavilāsa, Chēthakāri, Vichitrachitta, Aluptakāma, Kalahapriya, and Sankīrņajāti are in Sanskrit and Nilvilonayambu, Ventulavittu, etc., are in Telugu. Some of these birudas are those of Mahendrayarman.

Conjeevaram Inscription of Mahendravarman. Ep.
Col., No. 82 of 1921. Also see Jouveau-Dubreuil, Conjeevaram Inscription of Mahendravarman. Pallava-Grantha.

This is engraved on the pillar of the Paurnami Mandapa to the south of the central sanctuary of the Ekambaranathasvami temple, and consists of a series of birudas of the king who got them engraved such as Abhimukha, Chitrakarappuli, Vambara, Dydabhakti, etc. As some of these surnames occur in his other cave inscriptions it is probable that they belong to Mahēndravarman I.

27. Kudimiyāmalai Inscription of music. P. R. Bhandarkar, Ep. Ind., vol. xii, p. 226; Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1905, p. 47; Ep. Col., No. 354 of 1904.

The inscription is written in Sanskrit in the Pallavagrantha characters of the seventh century, on a rock behind the Sikhānāthasvāmi temple in Kudumiyāmalai (Pudukotta State). The inscription is divided into seven sections, corresponding to the seven classical rāgas and was engraved at the instance of an unnamed king who was a disciple of Rudrāchārya for the benefit of his pupils.

28. Aihole inscription of Pulakesin II. Kielhorn, Ep. Ind.,

vol. vi, p. 4.

Sanskrit in characters of the southern class. The inscription is a poem by a certain Ravikîrti who during the reign of Pulakēśin II founded the temple of Jinēndra on which it is engraved. It bears the date Śaka Samvat 556 corresponding to A.D. 634-35. It gives an eulogistic account of the history of Chāļukya family especially of the exploits of Pulakēśin II who is described to have besieged Banavāsi, subdued the Gangas, the Ālūpas, and the ø

Mauryas in the Konkanas, besieged Puri, subdued the Latas, Mālavas, and the Gūrjaras, defeated Harsha of Kanauj, fought with the Kalingas and the Kosalas, captured Pishtapura, fought at the Kaunāla, defeated the Pallavas of Kānchīpuram ('causing the splendour of the lord of the Pallavas who had opposed the rise of his power to be obscured by the dust of his army, and to vanish behind the walls of Kānchīpuram'), crossed the River Kāvērī and caused prosperity to the Chōlas, Kēralas and the Pāndyas. The fame of the composer of this poem is said to have exceeded that of Kālidāsa and Bhāravì, thus showing that already in the seventh century the fame of Kālidāsa had spread so as to be quoted in contemporary inscriptions.

Tirukkalukkunram Inscription of Rajakesarivarman.
 Tamil. Venkayya. Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 276.

This inscription is dated in the twenty-seventh year of the reign of Rājakēsarivarman and records that at the request of a certain Puttan a grant which had been made by Skandasishya and confirmed by Vātāpikonda-Narasingapōtarayar was renewed. The gift was originally made to the Mūlasthānattu-Perumān, which has not been identified. Both the kings are spoken of as former kings. On paleographical grounds the grant may be dated in the ninth century A.B. Tirukkaļukkunram is spoken of as being in the Kaļattūrkoṭṭam. Skandasishya may be Skandavarman and Vātāpikonda-Narasingapōtarayar is Narasimhavarman I.

 Bādāmi Stone Inscription (fragment). Fleet, Ind. Ant., vol. ix, p. 99.

This fragmentary inscription engraved on the northside of a shapeless rock lying to the north-west of the temple of Jeggina Îrappa in the Badami Taluq in the Biyapur District. The characters are of the same type as those of the Pallava grants of Vishnugopavarman. The fragment is of great interest as mentioning Badami under the ancient name of Vatapi and speaking (I. 4) of the Pallava, the foremost of kings'. It refers also to Narasimhavishnu and contains a reference to the occupation of the city by Māmalla.

Dharmarajaratha Stone Inscription at Mahabalipuram-31. Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. x, pp. 5ff., also S.I.I., vol. i. p. 1.

These inscriptions consist of a number of words in the nominative case. The characters resemble the Mahendravadi and Siyamangalam inscriptions of Mahendravarman I. The language is Sanskrit. They do not contain any date and their approximate time has to be fixed on palæographical grounds. They appear from a comparative study to belong to Narasimhavarman I. Narasimha is twice mentioned. From the archaic nature of the alphabets Dr. Hultzsch thinks that the Narasimha of the Dharmarājaratha may be identified with the Narasimha I of the Pallavas. The identification is made almost certain by a reference to the published facsimile of the Badami stone inscription of Narasimhavarman I the alphabets of which are nearly identical with those of the Dharmarajaratha Inscrip-Dharmarajaratha was probably sculptured tions. in the first half of the seventh century A.D.

Ganesa temple Inscription of Paramesvaravarman I. 32. Hultzsch, Et. Ind., vol. x, pp. 8ff. Eleven verses in Sanskrit.

This inscription records that the monolith on which it is engraved was a Siva temple and was called the Isvara temple of Atyantakāma-Pallava. From sloka 2 of this inscription Dr. Hultzsch has concluded that Atyantakāma must be either Paramēšvaravarman I, father of Rājasimha, or Paramēsvaravarman II, his son, preferably the former. The alphabets of Atyantakāma's inscription of the Seven Pagodas bear so close a resemblance to Kailāsanātha temple epigraphs of Rājasimha that both of them may be assigned to about the same period (viz.) the third quarter of the seventh century A.D. Among Atyantakāma's surnames the following are given—Śrinidhi, Śribhara, Ranajaya, Tarunankura, Kamaraga.

33. Dharmarāja Mandapa Inscriptions. Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. x, No. 22, pp. 10 and 11.

This is a duplicate of Gaņēśa temple inscription and proves that the cave-temple now called Dharmarāja Maṇḍapa was in reality a Siva temple and that it was erected at the orders of the Pallava king Paramēśvara, who named it Atyantakāma-Pallavēśvara after one of his own surnames Atyantakāma.

34. Inscription of Paramesvaravarman at the Rāmānuja

Mandapa. Ibid., p. 11.

This inscription consists of the last śloka of the preceding inscription and the cave-temple on which it is inscribed accordingly was a Siva temple having been excavated during the reign of the Pallava king Paramēśvaravarman.

35. Sāļuvankuppam Inscriptions of Atiraņachanda.

Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 12.

This inscription on the left of the cave-temple at Sāļuvankuppam records that the excavation was a temple of Śiva and that it was made by King Atiraņachanḍa who named it after himself Atiraņachanḍēśvara. Verses 1, 2 and 4 are identical with Paramēśvaravarman's Mahābalipuram inscription. It contains the birudas, Atyanlakāma, Srīnidhi, Kāmarāga, Śrībhara, Ranajaya, Anugrasıla, Kālakāla, Samaradanamjaya and Sangramadhīra. Most of these are applied to Rājasimha in his inscriptions at Kānchī. The alphabet resembles those of Kaśākkudi plates of Nandivarman II. The name Atiranachanda is unknown from other sources.

Nos. 24, 25 and 26 are Nagari copies of the above.

Küram plates of Paramēśvaravarman I. Hultzsch, 36. S.I.I., vol. i, pp. 144ff.

Seven copper-plates from Küram near Conjeevaram. The seal bears the usual Pallava symbol the seated bull facing the left. The language is partly in Sanskrit verse and prose and the rest Tamil and the script Pallava-Grantha. The Sanskrit portion opens with benedictory verses of which the first two are addressed to Siva. Then follows a mythical genealogy from Brahma to Pallava after whom are mentioned Mahēndravarman, his son Narasimhavarman, who is stated to have repeatedly defeated the Cholas, the Keralas, the Kalabhras and the Pandyas, and who vanquished Pulakesin in the battles of Pariyala, Manimangala, and Sūramāra and destroyed his capital Vātāpi. Of Paramēśvaravarman himself is given a long description of military exploits which mentions that made Vikramāditva whose army consisted several lakshas take to flight covered only by a rag. The object of the Kūram grant is a gift of the village of Paramesvaramangalam made to the temple of Siva which had been built at Küram by Vidyavinita-Pallava. The village was evidently named after the king himself and divided into twenty-five parts of which three were to be enjoyed by two Brahmans Anantasivāchārya and Pullasarman who looked after the divine service of the temple. The fourth part was set aside for the cost of providing water and fire for the temple mandapa, the fifth for the reading of the Bharala at this place while the remaining twenty parts were given to twenty Chaturvedins. Kuram is mentioned as belonging to Manyavantararashtra of Nīrvēļūr, a division of Urrukāttukkottam. The village of Paramesvaramangalam belonged to Panma-Nādu Patmamānyāvāntararāshtra, a sub-division of Manavirkottam.

Gadval Plates of Vikramaditya, A.D. 674. Hultzsch, 37. Et. Ind., vol. x, No. 22, p. 101.

Three copper-plates. Language is Sanskrit prose and verse; alphabet like other Chāļukyan grants. The inscription records the grant of land by the Western-Chālukya king Vikramāditya I, the son of Satyāśraya. (Pulakëśin II) grandson of Kirtivarman (I) and great grandson of Pulakesin (I). Several surnames of the king are mentioned such as Śrivallabha, Ranarasika. Rajamalla. Śloka 3 states that he defeated Narasimha, Mahēndra and Īśvara, the three successive Pallaya kings, Narasimhayarman I, Mahendrayarman II and Paramesvaravarman I. Sloka 4 alludes to the conquest of Kānchī the capital of the Pallavas. Śloka 5 states that Vikramaditya first destroyed the Mahāmalla family. At the time of the grant Vikramāditya's army having invaded the Chôla province was encamped in Uragapura on the southern bank of the Kāvēri (ii. 25ff). The date of the grant was the full-moon tithi of Vaišakha in the twentieth year of the reign which was current after 596 Saka, equivalent to Tuesday, 25th April, A.D. 674. (Dr. Hultzsch identified Uragapuram with Negapatam in the Taniore District and Venkayya with Uraiyur near Trichinopoly Town, the ancient Chola capital.)

Panamalai Inscription of Rajasimha. Mad. Ep. Rep. for 38. 1916, p. 114; Ep. Col., No. 616 of 1915; also, Pallava Ant., vol. i, p. 1.

The beginning and end of this inscription found in the Talapuriśvara temple at Panamalai are covered by a paved floor. The record which consists of six verses is in the floried Grantha-Pallava characters and is written right round the temple as in the Kailāsanātha temple inscription of Rājasimha at Kānchipura. The existing portion mentions Aśvattāma, his son Pallava, who was the progenetor of the great Pallava family the members of which, washed their sins away by Aśvamedha sacrifices and belonged to the Bhāradvājavamśa. Rājasimha is described as a famous king of the line who was born from Paramēśvara as 'Guha from Śiva'. Under his care the tree of Dharma is said to have thriven even though oppressed by the hot sun, the Kali age.

 Rājasimhēśvara Shrine Inscriptions of Rājasimha. Hultzsch, S.I.I., vol. i, No. 24, p. 13.

Twelve Sanskrit verses in the Grantha-Pallava running round the outside of the central shrine. The record opens with a benediction addressed to Ganga, and then gives a mythical pedigree of Pallava from (Brahman). It further says that in the race of the Pallavas was born Ugradanda, the destroyer of the city of Ranarasika whose son was Rājasimha who bore the surnames Atyantakāma, Ranajaya, Śrībhara; he is said to have built the Śiva temple round which the inscription is written and called it after his own name Rājasimha-Pallavēšvara or Rājasimhēšvara.

 Inscription of Rangapatāka. Hultzsch, S.I.I., vol. i, No. 29, pp. 23-24.

The record consisting of three Sanskrit verses in characters similar to Rājasimha's records that the small Siva shrine was founded by Rangapatāka the wife of Narasimhavishņu or Kālakāla whose sign was the Bull.

 Panamalai Cave Inscription of Rājasimha. Hultzsch, S.I.I., vol. i, No. 31, p. 24.

This record consists of a single Sanskrit sloka in Grantha-Pallava characters and is identical with the last verse of Rājasimha's Kāñchī inscription (S.I.I., vol. i. No. 24). It mentions the birudas of Rājasimha, Srībhara, Chitrakārmuka, Ekavīra, and Šīvachudāmani. Dr. Hultzsch from a study of this inscription concludes that the Panamalai cave was founded by Rājasimha and that the Pallava rule extended as far south as Panamalai at this period.

 Shore Temple Inscription of Rajasimha. Ep. Col., 566 of 1912. Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1913, paras 8 and 9.

This record consisting of about six Sanskrit verses is inscribed round the plinths of the two bali-pithas recently excavated in the shore-temple. The record is not complete but contains an eulogy of a Pallava king whose attributes were Alyantakama, Aparajita, Sivachadamani, etc. Another verse refers to him as Rājasimha, Ranajaya, Śrībhara and Chitrakārmuka and is identical with the twelfth verse of the Kanchipuram inscription of Rajasimha. The mention in the record of the king as the ruling sovereign makes it probable that he was Rajasimha son of Paramēśvaravarman I, who bore the surnames Kshatriyasimha and Räjasimha. The two Śiva temples of the Shore Temple Kshatriyasimha and Rājasimhapallavēšvaram were evidently contemporary with Rajasimhapallaveśvaram of Kańchipuram and named after Rajasimha.

 Vāyalūr stone pillar Inscription of Rājasimha. Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1909, part ii, para 16, p. 17. Joveau-Dubreuil, Pallavas, ch. ii, pp. 19-21; Ep. Col., No. 368 of 1908; H. K. Sāstri, Ep. Ind., vol. xviii, p. 145.

This record is engraved on a cubical pillar in the Vyāghrapurīsvara temple at Vāyalūr. It is written in the usual Grantha-Pallava characters of the florid type used in the Ramānuja mandapa and the Ganeša temple inscriptions at Mahābalipuram, and the Kaīlasanātha inscription at Kāūchīpura. It gives a list of the Pallava kings in genealogical order. Beginning with the names of Brahma, Angirasa, etc., it proceeds to mention the names of Ašoka, Harigupta, Āryavarman, Bhūtadatta, etc. and a long list of further names obviously in the order of descent. These include Süryavarman, Rüpamalla, Dhritaka Vimala Konkanika, Kälabhartr, Chüta-Pallava, Virakürcha, Vishnugöpa, Skandavarman, Kumäravishnu, among the early Pallava kings of the copper-plates. Then are mentioned the names of Simhavarman, Nandivarman, Simhavishnu, Mahëndravarman, Narasimhavarman and Paramësvaravarman and Rājasimha. The value of the record consists in the connection which it establishes between the Pallavas of the Prakrit charters and those of the Sanskrit charters and the connection of these again with those of the Simhavishnu line.

 Inscription in the Kailāsanātha temple of Mahēndravarman II. Hultzsch, S.I.I., vol. i, No. 27, p. 22.

The record consists of four Sanskrit verses in Grantha-Pallava characters of Rājasimha's period and registers the fact that Mahēndra, the son of Rājasimha and grandson of Lokāditya built a temple of Siva and called it Mahēndrēśvara after his own name. The record is engraved round the smaller shrine which stands in front of Rājasimha's Kailāsanātha shrine. It speaks of Lokāditya that 'his valour dried up the army of Rāņarasika, just as the heat of the sun does the mud.'

 Virattanësvara temple Inscription of Paramësvaravarman II. Ep. Col., No. 56 of 1903. Tamil.

This inscription engraved on a slab lying in front of the Vīrattānēśvara temple at Tiruvādi records in Tamil a gift of gold and is dated in the third year of Paramēśvarapotarayar.

 Vaikunthaperumäl Inscription. Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1906, part. ii, pp. 62-63; Ep. Col., No. 37 of 1888. Text, S.I.I., vol. iv, pp. 10ff. Also see Ep. Ind., vol. xviii, p. 117.

This is not a single record but a series of inscriptions each explaining the group of sculptures below which it is put up. They are in the nature of explanatory notes denoting particular events in Pallava history. The portion relating to the events leading to the accession of Pallavamalla is very important and contains a full account of the circumstances under which Nandivarman (II) succeeded to the Pallava throne which is depicted in twelve sculptured scenes on the south wall of the veranda running round the central shripe. It is stated therein that after the death of Parameśvaravarman II a deputation of the officials and citizens waited on Hiranyavarma-Mahāraja for the selection of a sovereign to the Pallava throne. Hiranyavarman, thereupon, held an important consultation with the chief potentates and his sons. Ultimately Pallayamalla the twelve-yearold son of Hiranyavarman was selected by common consent and was crowned king under the name Nandivarman, and with the Pallava insignia and war instruments-Samudraghasha, Khatvangadhvaja and Vrishabha-lanchana. The members of the Merchants'-guild, the City-Council, and the Ubhaiyagana of Kanchi are also mentioned as having taken an important part in the above events.

 Sthambesvara Temple Inscription of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman. Ep. Col., No. 68 of 1900.

Tamil record, dated in the third year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman records the building of a temple mandapa at Sthambesvara temple at Siyamangalam (South Arcot District).

 Virattaneśvara Temple Inscription of Nandivikramavarman. Ep. Col., No. 300 of 1902.

Tamil record inscribed on a rock in the prakara of the Virattaneśvara temple, Kilūr, near Tirukkoilūr, dated in the fourth year of Nandivikramavarman registering gift of gold for lamp.

In the same place. Ep. Col., No. 295 of 1902. Tamil inscription dated in the eleventh year of VijayaNandivikramavarman records a gift of gold.

50. Ep. Col., No. 49 of 1905.

This is a Tamil inscription found on the south wall of the rock-cut cave at Dalavanur (South Arcot District,) is dated in the fifteenth year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman. Much damaged.

51. Eb. Col., No. 296 of 1902.

Tamil inscription, dated in the sixteenth year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman recording gift of gold for a lamp found in the prakara of the Vīraţṭānēśvara temple at Kiļūr near Tirukkoilūr.

52. Ep. Col., No. 220 of 1902.

Tamil inscription dated in the ninteenth year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman found on the west wall of the Rishabhanātha temple records gift of paddy.

Incomplete.

53. Udayendiram Plates of Nandivarman Pallavamalla, Hultzsch, S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 365. Sanskrit and Tamil. The grant consists of two parts, the first a grant of the Pallava king Nandivarman Pallavamalla in the Sanskrit, and the other an inscription of the time of the Chola king Madiraikonda-Ko-Parakesarivarman in Tamil.

The object of the Sanskrit portion is to register a grant made at the request of one of his military officers Udayachandra by Nandivarman Pallavamalla in the twenty-first year of the reign. Udayachandra is described as belonging to the Pūchan family and as residing in the city of Villivala on the River Vēgavati. The record gives the mythical genealogy, and the race of Simhavishau and his successors. It describes Nandivarman-Pallavamalla as the son of Paramēśvaravarman II. The most interesting part of the grant is that relating to the services rendered by Udayachandra to Pallavamalla which included the release of his sovereign from Nandipura where he was besieged by the Tamil kings, the killing of Chitramāya, defeat of the Šabara king Udayana, the Nishāda chief Prithivi-Vyāghra, and the subjection of the district of Vishņurāja to the Pallava, etc. The donees were hundred and eight Brāhmans, while the grant consisted of Kumāramangala-Velļātur and two water-levers. The Tamil endorsement dated in the twenty-sixth year of Ko-Parakēśarivarman relates to the agreement of two villages Udayachandramangalam and the neighbouring village of Kânchivāyil to form one village of the two.

 Kaśākkudi plates of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. Eleven copper-plates with a seal containing the figure of a bull facing left. Hultzsch, S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 346.

Sanskrit and Tamil. The characters of the plates belong to the Pallava-grantha, and bear a close resemblance to the Kūram plates. The grant part of the record is preceded by an account of the ancestors of the donor Nandivarman Pallavamalla which was composed by Trivikrama. After the mythical genealogy from Brahma to Asokavarman, the record mentions the Pallava kings Skandavarman, Kalindavarman, Kanagöpa, Virakūrcha, Virasimha, Simhavarman and Vishnusimha. Then are mentioned Simhavishnu called Avanisimha. Mahendravarman (1), his son Narasimhavarman (I), his son Mahendravarman II, his son Paramēśvaravarman (I), his son Narasimhavarman II, his son Paramēśvaravarman (II). The donor Nandivarman Pallavamalla in whose twenty-second year the record is dated is described as being descended from Simhavishnu's younger brother Bhimavarman, between whom and Nandivarman (II) there intervened the kings Bhimavarman, Adityavarman, Govindavarman and Hiranya, the father of Nandivarman. The object of the grant which was made at the request of Brahmaśrirāja was Kodukolli which received the name of Ekadhiramangalam. The donce was Jyeshthapada-Somayajin who belonged to the Bharadvajagotra a Vedic scholar, and a student of Kalpa, Vyakarana, Jyotisha. Nirukta, etc., and who lived in Pūniya in Tundāka-Rashtra. There is an interesting list of immunities secured by the donee. Mention is also made of local officials and His Majesty's Treasurer Sri-Paramesvara-Mahakoshthagarin.

55. Eb. Col., No. 14 of 1893. Tamil.

This inscription found in the west and east walls of the Muktësvara temple of Conjeevaram is dated in the twenty-eighth year of Nandivarman and gives the ancient name of the temple as Dharmamahadevisvara evidently after Dharmamahādēvi, a Pallava Queen.

56. Panchapandavamalai Inscription of Nandipottarasar.

Ep. Col., No. 10 of 1895.

This inscription written in very archaic Tamil characters consists of a single sentence in Tamil, records in the fiftieth year of Nandipottarasar an inhabitant of Pugalalaimangalam caused to be engraved an image of Ponnivakkivar attended by the preceptor Nāganandin.

57. Et. Col., No. 27 of 1887.

Tamil fragmentary inscription on a stone in the Gramadevata temple at Sadupperi is dated in the fifty-second year of Kö-Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman.

Eb. Col., No. 154 of 1921. 58.

> Tamil inscription, dated in the fifty-second year of Vijaya-Nandīśvarayarman found in Kuludikkai, North Arcot District, records the death of Kannadu-Perungangar, chief of Karkāttūr who at the instance of the great Bana king fought and fell on the day of the great Pallava invasion against Permanadigal and the destruction of Perungulikottai.

59. Tandantöttam plates of Kövijava-Nandivikramavarman. H. K. Sastri. S.I.I., vol. ii, part v, p. 517. Also Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1912, paras 4 and 5.

Fourteen copper-plates from Tandanötttam with seal bearing in relief a couchant Bull facing right.

Sanskrit and Tamil in the Grantha-Pallava characters. Some of the introductory plates containing the genealogy of the Pallava kings are missing. The existing plates commence with the information that a particular king conquered the south, after which the birth of Hiranyayarman is recorded. From him was born Nandivarman who bore the biruda Ekadhira. Of him it is recorded that he took away from an unnamed Ganga-king a neck ornament which contained in it the gem called Ugrodaya. The inscription also gives the name of Nandivarman's elephant as Pattavardhana (v. 7.). The object of the grant was to register the gift of a village called Dayamukhamangalam to 308 Brahmans learned in the Vedas, and Smrtis who were Chaturvēdis, Trivēdis, Somayājins, Bhattas, Shadangavids, Kramavids, etc. Provision was made for the conduct of worship to the local Vishnu and the Siva temples, and also for the recitation of the Mahabharata in the temple-hall. The Sanskrit part of the record ends with the portion which mentions that the agnapti of the charter was Kumara, the Chief of the Treasury, and the composer of the Prasasti, the poet Paramesvara-Uttarakaranika. the Tamil portion is dated in the fifty-eighth year of Köviśajva-Nandivikramavarman and records an order which was issued to the residents of Tenkarainādu, a district of Solanadu. The donces whose enumeration occupies more than eleven plates, number 244. To judge from their titles it may be presumed that most of them were learned. The concluding portion enumerates the obligations and the immunities of taxation secured by the donees.

 Tiruvallam Rock Inscription of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman. Ep. Col., No. 76 of 1899 and S.I.I., vol. iii, p. 90.

Tamil record. This inscription is engraved on the surface of a large boulder in the bed of the Niva river, near Tiruvallam, and is written in archaic Grantha-Tamil characters. It is dated in the sixty-second year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman while Māvali-Vāṇarāya was ruling the Vaduga-vali-Twelve-thousand; it registers a gift of land for the renewal of a temple Vadaśikharakovil, at Vāṇapuram by a goldsmith called Aridhīran, a resident of Alingaṇappākkam in the district of Ūṛrukāṭṭukōṭṭam.

61. Korrangudi Plates No. 5 of App. A. 1922-3. O.J M.S., vol. xiv, pp. 125-139. Also Ep. Ind., vol. xviii, pp. 115 ff. Five copper-plates written on eight sides unearthed from a hamlet of Kottamangalam in Tanjore District. The engraving is partly in Grantha and partly Tamil. The record consists of eleven Sanskrit verses and a prose passage in Tamil. It opens with invocatory verses to Vishnu. Then is given the usual mythical genealogy of Pallava through Brahma, Angiras, Brahaspati, etc. Verses 4 and 5 give a panegyric account of the Pallava family. The historical account which begins with (v. 6.) states that after Virākurcha and others had gone to heaven, Hiranyavarma became king. Then came Nandivarma while yet he was very young and his conquests over Vallabha. Kalabhra, Kērala Pandya and Chola, are detailed. The Tamil portion is dated in the sixty-first year of the reign of Ko. Vij. Nandivikramavarman and registers a gift of land which was received by the Brahmans of Nalgur. The names of the donces are then enumerated-Adivaraha temple inscription of Mahabalipuram, No. 666, 1922. Ep. Col. No. 666 of 1922.

This Grantha-Tamil inscription is written on two sides of a slab lying in the court-yard of the Ädivaraha temple at Mahabalipuram. It is dated in the 65th year of Nandipotavarman and registers a gift of land by purchase from the citizens of Mahamallapuram.

Kâñchi inscription of Vikramāditya II. Dr. Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 359. The inscription is in Kanarese prose and is engraved on the back of the pillar of the mandapa in front of the Rājasimhēśvara shrine. It records that Vikramāditya Satyāśraya after his conquest of Kānchī, did not confiscate the property of Rājasimhēśvara temple but granted large sums of money to the temple. The inscription ends with the imprecation that those who destroy the letters of the record and the stability of the king's charity, shall incur the sin of those who killed the men of the assembly of the city (Ghaţi-kaiyār).

 Vakkalēri plates of Kirtivarman. Rice, Ind. Ant., vol. viii, p. 23, also Kielhorn, Ep. Ind., vol. v, p. 200.

Five copper-plates first brought to notice by L. Rice. The language of the record is Sanskrit and mostly prose. The record belongs to the Western Chālukya king Kirtivarman II whose ancestors are mentioned between lines 2-59. The object of the inscription is to record in the eleventh year of his reign, 679 Sāka, the gift of Sulliyūr and two other villages to Mādhava-Sarman. The gift was made while the king was encamped on the northern bank of Bhīmarathi.

The historical portion of the grant mentions the origin and exploits of the early Chālukyan Kings, Pulakēśin, Satyāśraya-Vikramāditya of whom it is said that he forced the king of Kāñchi who had never bowed to any man to lay his crown at his feet. Of his son Vinayāditya it is said that he captured the whole army of Trairājya-Pallava and also levied tribute from the rulers of Kavēra, Pārasika, Simhala, and other islands. Then Vijayāditya's exploits are mentioned and is followed by an account of Vikramāditya who immediately after his coronation, being resolved to root out the Pallavas (who are described as the obscurers of the splendours of the former kings of his line and their natural enemies) entered the Tundākarāshtra,

"trophies, elephants and rubies, etc., triumphantly entered Kānchī and without plundering it caused the statues in the Rājasimhēśvara to be overlaid with gold. Of Kīrtivarman the donor of the grant, the inscription records that, while yet a Yuvaraja, he marched into the city of Kānchī scattered the forces of the Pallava king who had to take refuge in a hill-fort, and returned with a large booty which he delivered to his father and in due course became a Sarvabhauma.

 Kendur plates of Kirtivarman II. Pathak, Ep. Ind., vol. ix, p. 200, Saka 672.

The record belongs to the Western Chālukya king Kirtivarman II. The language of the inscription is in Sanskrit and in prose while the characters belong to the southern class of alphabets.

After recounting the exploits of Kirtivarman I and Pulakēšin II it says of Vikramāditya I, that he recovered part of the Chalukyan dominions by means of his horse Chitrakantha which had been previously overrun by the Pallavas and had obeisance done to him by them. Vijayāditya though he was taken prisoner, contrived to effect a skilful escape. Of Vikramāditva II the record says that he led an excursion to the Tundākavishaya, defeated his natural foe, entered the Pallava capital Kānchi and restored to Rajasimheśvara and the other temples, heaps of gold and rubies which had been taken away from them. He was succeeded by Kirtivarman II, the donor of the grant. The object of the grant is to register the gift of the village of Bepatti made at the request of his queen in the sixth year of his reign in Saka 672 on the occasion of a lunar eclipse.

 Vēlvikkudi Plates of Nedunjadaiyan. Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1908, p. 62; Ep. Ind., vol. xvii, pp. 291 ff.

The record consists of Sanskrit and Tamil, the Sanskrit portion being written in Grantha characters while the Tamil portion is written in Vatteluttu characters. The Sanskrit portion after giving a mythical origin of the Pāndya kings mentions Māravarman who is said to have performed the tulabhara ceremony; his son was Rapadhīra; his son was Māravarman Rājašimha who is stated to have defeated Pallavamalla in battle, and performed the tulabhara and hemagarbha ceremonies. Jatila was his son born through a Malava princess whom he had married. His son was Rājasimha the donor of the present record. The prasasti was composed by Varōdayabhatta.

The Tamil portion refers to the grant of Velvikkudi by Palyagaśalai-mudukudumi-peruvaludi to Korkaikilan-Narkorran and mentions the Kalabhra-occupation of the country. Then it proceeds to record the reestablishment of the Pandya power under Kadungon whose son was Adhirāja-Māravarman-Avani-Śūlāmani, His son was Selivan-Sendan famous for his heroism. his son Arikēśarin Asamasaman-Māravarman of whom it is recorded that he overcame the oceanlike army of the Vilvēli in the battle of Nelvēli. conquered the king of Kerala and performed several times the ceremonies of Hemagarba and the Tulabhara. His son Kō-Sadaiyan is said to have destroyed at Marudur the army, and at Mangalapura the Maharatha who was overcome and destroyed. Ter-Maran, his son, fought the battles of Neduvayal. Kurumadai, Manni-kurichchi, Tirumangai, Pūvālūr, Kodumbālūr, and Kulumbūr against the Pallava. He is further credited with having subdued Majakongam. entered into relations with the Gangaraja, renewed the walls of Kūdal, Vanji and Koli. His son was Tennan-vānavan-Nedunjadayan, who is stated to have conquered at Pennagadam, the Ayavel and the Kurumbas at the battle of Nättukurumbu. In the third year of his reign he renewed a land grant made by Palyagaśalai-mudukudumi-Peruvaludi to the palace singer. The agnapti of the grant was Māran-Kāri and the poet who composed the Tamil portion of the grant was Ēnādi alias Śāttan.

 Bigger Sinnamanur Plates of Rājasimha. Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1907, pp. 63 ff.

Sanskrit and Tamil in Grantha and Vattefuttu characters. The Sanskrit portion occupies four plates. After enumeration of the names of a number of mythical kings are mentioned Arikesarin, Jatila, Rājasimha, Varaguņa, and Māravarman who held the birudas Ēkadhīra and Śrīvallabha. He is said to have conquered Māyapāndya, Kērala, Simhala and Pallava, and Vallabha; Varaguṇavarman, Parāntaka and Rājasimha are then mentioned in order, the last being the donor of the grant, the object of which was to record the gift of Narcheigai-puttūr in Aļanādu to one Parāntaka of Kausika-gotra.

The Tamil portion which is written in Vatteluttu characters after mentioning the mythical and semimythical exploits of early Pāndyan kings makes mention of the Tamil translation of the Mahabārata, and the establishment of the Madura College (Sangam). Then are mentioned Parānkuśa who is said to have conquered the Pallavas at Śankaramangai, his grandson Rājasimha Varaguṇamahārāja, his son Parachakrakōlāhala, who gained victories at Kunnūr, Śingalam, and Viliñam, and defeated at Kudamūkku, the Gangas, the Pallavas, the Cholas, the Kalingas and the Māgadhas: then came Varaguṇavarman, his younger brother Parāntakan. Śadaiyan who fought at Kharagiri and destroyed Pennāgadam; then came Rājasimha the donor.

68. Madras Museum Plates of Jaţilavarman. Venkayya, Ind. Ant., 1893, pp. 57ff. The Sanskrit portion is in Grantha characters and the Tamil in Vaţteluttu characters. After invocatory verses to Brahma, Vishpu and Siva, Māravarman is mentioned as having been born in the Pāndya race and is credited with having destroyed the Pallavas. In the Tamil portion his son Jaţila is described as having destroyed his enemies at Viliñam, Śeliyakkudi.and Vellūr and as having advanced against an enemy who was joined by the Pallava and the Kēraļa. He is also stated to have captured the Western-Kongu king, entered the village of Kānchivāyil and there built a temple to Vishņu. He also destroyed the town of Viliñam and the king of Vēn. (Vēṇadu or Travancore.) The object of the record is to register the gift of a village Vēlangudi to Sujjalabhatta, a learned Brahman.

69. Ep. Col., No. 256 of 1922. Tamil.

This record written on a slab built into the floor of the mandapa in front of the Vānādhīśvara temple, Vayalakāvur (Conjeevaram Taluk) is dated in the second year of the reign of Vijaya-Dantivikramavarman and registers a gift of paddy by five private individuals for offerings and lamp for the Bhatāra of the village.

 Tiruvellarai Inscription of Dantivarman. Fifth year. Ep. Col., No. 541 of 1905. K. V. S. Ayyar, Ep. Ind., vol. xi, p. 156.

Tamil prose and verse. This inscription is engraved in one of the stones of the well, south of the Pundarīkāksha Perumāl temple at Tiruvellarai near Trichinopoly. The object of the inscription is to record the construction of a well called Mārpiduguperunginaru by one Kamban-Araiyan, the younger brother of a certain Viśaiya-Nallulān of Ālambākkam. The work was commenced according to the record, in the fourth year of Dantīvarman of the Pallavatilaka family and sprung from Bhāradvāja-Gētra, and completed in the fifth year. The village and the tank may be identified with the modern village and tank of Ālambākkam situated at a distance of twelve miles from Lalgudi in the Trichinopoly District.

- Tondur Inscription of Dantivikramavarman. Tamil. 71. Eb. Col., No. 283 of 1916.
 - This is a Tamil inscription on a boulder in a field near the Vinnambarai rock near Tondur. The object of the inscription is to register in the sixth year of Vijaya-Dantivikramavarman a gift of gold by Vinnakövaraiyar to the temple of Kunrānār-Bhattāri for the merit of Udäradhi and Nambi who fell in a cattle raid. The gold was received by the residents of Kilvali-Aruvāgūr in Singapuranādu.
- 72. Tamil Record at Uttaramallur. Ep. Col., No. 80 of 1898. Fragmentary-Tamil inscription is dated in the seventh year of Dantivarman recording sale of land.
- 73. Uttaramallur Inscription of Dantipottarasar. Ep. Col., No. 74 of 1898.
 - This is a Tamil inscription engraved in the south wall of the Vaikunthaperumal temple at Uttaramallur dated in the ninth year of Dantipottarasar. The object of the inscription is to register a gift of gold for digging a tank.
- Uttaramallur Tamil Inscription. Ep. Col., No. 51 of 74. 1898. This Tamil fragmentary inscription found in the Sundaravaradaperumāl temple at Uttaramallūr is dated in the tenth year of Vijava-Dantivikramavarman.
- 75. Triplicane Inscription of Dantivarman, Venkayya, Ep. Ind., vol. viii, No. 29, p. 291.
 - This inscription consists of nineteen lines of Tamil prose and is found in the garbhagrha of the Pärthasärathi temple at Triplicane. It is dated in the twelfth year of Dantivarma-Maharaja who is described as the ornament of the Pallava family and as belonging to the Bharadvaja-gotra. The object of the inscription is to record that the priests of the temple had mortgaged a field belonging to the temple and in consequence the interest of forty-five kādis of paddy fell short in the rice-offerings presented to the God. This was restored by a certain Pugaltunai-Viśaiyarāyan who redeemed the gold by a gift of thirty kādis of paddy and five kalañjus of gold.

 Uttaramallur Tamil Inscription. Ep. Col., No. 61 of 1898.

This inscription engraved on the south wall of the Vaikunthaperumal temple at Uttaramallur is dated in the twenty-first year of Dantivikramavarman and records a certain resolution of the Village Assembly.

77. Ep. Col., No. 262 of 1904.

This inscription is written on a detached stone lying outside the temple at Tiruchānūr dated in the fifty-first year of Vijaya-Dantivikrama records a gift of lamp by Ulagaperumānār to the shrine of Tiruvilangovil-Perumānadigal in Tiruchohinūr in Kadavūr-Nādu, a subdivision of Tiruvēngadakottam.

 Ep. Col., No. 226 of 1903. Venkayya, Ep. Ind., vol. xi, p. 224.

Tamil. This record written on a stone in the Paramesvara temple at Gudimallam. It is dated in the forty-ninth year of Vijaya-Dantivikramavarman, while Vijayaditya-Māvalivāṇarāyar was ruling the earth, and registers the gift of land called Nandikundil to the tank Velleri. Out of the produce of this land was to be met the charges for digging pits in the tank and depositing it in the bund.

79. Ep. Col., No. 89 of 1921. Tamil.

This inscription dated in Dantivikramavarman's reign is engraved on a slab in the shrine of Tirumerrali in Pillaipalayam. It mentions a certain Muttaraiyan who had petitioned for certain charities to the temple of Tirumerrali and a certain matha attached. The portion recording the regnal year in which the record was inscribed is damaged.

This copper-plate grant records the grant made by Govinda III while encamped on the bank of the River Tungabhadra to Gôrava a Śaiva priest. The record is dated Thursday, the fifth tithi of the dark fortnight of the month of Vaiśāka, of the year Subhānu, Śaka 726 expired, corresponding to Thursday, 4th April, A.D. 804. The record mentions that Govinda had conquered Dantiga the ruler of Kāūchī and as having levied tribute from him.

81. Ep. Col., No. 347 of 1914.

This is a Tamil inscription written in the rock-cut cave of Parvatagiriśvara temple at Kunnandär koil (Pudukotta) in the third year of Nandipöttaraśar and registers a gift of rice for feeding 100 persons on the day of Tiruvādirai by a resident of Valuvūr.

 The Velürpälayam Plates. H. K. Sastri, S.I.I., vol. ii, No. 98, pp. 507 ff.

Five copper-plates in Sanskrit and Tamil, the seal bearing a Pallava bull in a recumbent posture facing the proper right. After invocatory verses to the supreme being, the legendary origin of the Pallavas is given from Vishnu to Pallava through Brahma, Angirasa, Brhaspati, Śamyu, Bhāradvāja, Drona and Aśvattāma. Then occur the names of Asokavarman, Kalabhartr, his son Chūta-Pallava, Virakūrcha, of whom it is stated that he acquired the emblems of sovereignty on marrying the daughter of the Lord of the Serpants. Their son Skandasishya is said to have seized the Ghatika of the Brahmans from Satyasena. After him was born Kumāravishnu who is stated to have captured Kanchi. His son Buddhavarman is described to have been a submarine fire to the ocean of the Chola army. After Vishnugopa and several other kings had passed away Nandivarman I was born who is credited with having subjected a powerful snake called Drishtivisha. Simhavarman is introduced in verse 10 as the father of Simhavishnu the latter being described as the conqueror of the Chola country. The subsequent verses repeat the names and exploits of the members of the Simhavishau line supplied by Kaśäkkudi and other plates. Two successions after Nandivarman Pallavamalla are supplied by these plates. Dantivarman was the son of Nandivarman II through Reva (Sloka 18). His son through Aggalanimmati the Kadamba princess was King Nandivarman III, the donor. The object of the grant which was made in the sixth year of the reign was the gift of the village of Śrikattupalli to the Śiva temple built by a certain Yagnabhatta on the request of a Chola Mahārāja, Kumārānkuśa. A long list of exemptions stating sources of royal revenue is given. The village has been identified with Kattupalli in Ponneri Taluk.

83. Ep. Col., No. 52 of 1895.

This is a Tamil inscription dated in the tenth year of Tellargerinda-Nandipottarayar, (i.e.) Nandipottarayar the victor at Tellar, engraved in the entrance of Grithasthanesvara temple at Tillasthanam. The object of the inscription is to register a gift of gold for a perpetual lamp.

84. Ep. Col., No. 11 of 1899. Twelfth year. Tamil.

This inscription which is written in the first pillar in the mandapa of Sundarësvara temple at Sendalai, records in the twelfth year of Nandipöttarayar who defeated his enemies at Tellaru, a gift of land to the temple.

 Tiruvallam Inscription of Vijaya Nandivikramavarman. Hultzsch, S.I.I., vol. iii, p. 93.

Tamil. This inscription which is found in the Siva temple of Bilvanāthēšvara at Tiruvallam belongs to the seventeenth year of the reign of Vijaya Nandivikramavarman three villages which were clubbed together and called Vidēlvidugu-Vikramāditya-Chaturvēdimangalam, were given away to Siva at Tikkālivallam in Mīyārunādu, a subdivision of the Paduvürköttam. It stipulates that the Assembly should pay 2000 kādi of paddy and twenty Kaļanju of gold to the temple for the feeding of Siva Brahmans. the drum-beaters and other temple servants including the singers of Tirupadiyam as well as for perpetual lamps, anointment of idols, temple repairs, etc. The mention of Tirupadiyam at this early period is significant.

Ep. Col., No. 12 of 1895. Venkayya. M.C.C. Mag., 86. vol. viii, p. 102,

This is a Tamil inscription engraved on a stone built into the veranda round the garbagrha of the Ulagalanda-Perumāl temple at Kānchīpuram, dated in the eighteenth year of the Nandipottarayar who was victorious at Tellaru. It registers a license to the villagers of Videlvidugu-Kudiraicheriyar to carry on trade in all goods from camphor on one side and shoes on the other side. This was done at the request of Anuttara-Pallavarāyan. The Agnapti was Kādupatti Tamilappērarayan.

Ep. Col., 283 of 1901. 87.

This inscription is engraved into the entrance to the Śadāiyar temple at Tiruchannambündi near Koviladi, Tanjore District and registers, in the eighteenth year of Nandipottarāyar who was victorious at Tellaru, a gift of two lamps to the temple.

Ep. Col., No. 180 of 1907. 88.

This inscription engraved in the twenty-second year of Nandipottarayar, the victor at Tellaru, in a stone in the north wall of the Adimūlesvara temple at Tirupaļātturai registers a gift of gold for two lamps in the temple of Mahadevabhatara at Tiruparāyturai.

Gudinallam Bana Inscription of the twenty-third year of 89. Nandipöttarāšar. Venkayya. Five Bana inscriptions of Gudimallam. Ep. Ind., vol. xi, pp. 224 ff.

This is a Bāṇa inscription in Tamil found in the Paramēśvara temple at Guḍimallam. It records, in the twenty-third year of the glorious Nandipōttaraśar, while Vikramāditya-Māvalivāṇarāya was ruling the Vadugavalimērku, one of the members of the committee administering the Tiruviprambēḍu, purchased by a deed of sale a field from one Agniśarman and made a gift of it to the God Mahādēva of the temple of Paraśurāmēśvara for ghee and sacred lamps. The Assembly accordingly ordered that all the oil-mills in the village should be set up and the oil secured.

90, Ep. Col., No. 68 of 1908.

This Tamil inscription, dated in the sixth year of Nripatungapotarayar is written on a slab set up near the sluice of a tank at Valuvūr and registers the construction of a sluice by a private individual.

91. Ep. Col., No. 365 of 1904.

Tamil, dated in the seventh year of Vijaya-Nrpatungavarman and engraved in the north base of a ruined mandapa in a rock-cut Siva shrine at Narttämalai refers to the excayation of the temple by Sättan Paliyili, son of Videlvidugu Muttaraiyan.

92. Bāhūr plates of Nripatungavarman. Hultzsch. Ep. Ind., vol. iv, pp. 180 ff. Text of the record in H. K. Sastri, S.I.I., vol. ii, part v. p. 515. Translation of Sanskrit portion in Jouveau-Dubreuil's Pallavas, pp. 49 ff. Freshly edited with text and translation in Ep. Ind.,

vol. xviii, pp. 5 ff. by E. Hultzsch.

Original plates missing. The record which is in Sanskrit and Tamil consists of about thirty verses in Sanskrit. The first contains an invocation to Vishnu while the next five furnish the mythical pedigree from Brahma to Pallava, through Āngirasa and Samyu, Bhāradvāja, Drōna and Aśvattāman. In the lineage of the Pallava was born Vimala, Konkanika, etc., after whose demise came Dantivarman a devotee of Vishnu who was equal to Indra and who had obeisance done to him by other Kings. From Dantivarman was born the powerful Nandivarman, who is described as having taken the earth unaided in battle, and who had married Sankā born in the Rāshtrakūta family. Their son was Nrpatungadeva who was the donor famous in other worlds, as Rama was and who is said to have been victorious in the battle of Kālava (?) and who defeated the Pandyan armies on the banks of the Arichit. The object of the record is to register the gift of three villages, Chettupakkam, Viţangattukaduvanur, and Iraippunaicheri to the College of Vedic studies at Bahur (Vidyasthana), The villages were freed from all taxes. The Tamil portion dated in the eighth year of Vijaya-Nrpatungavarman records the announcement of the gift to the residents of the Bahur village and refers to Videlvidugu-Kādupaţţi-Tamilapēraraiyan as the Agñapti, and that the villages as being situated in the subdivision of Aruvanadu.

93. Ep. Col., No. 460 of 1905.

This is a Tamil inscription found in the first prakara wall of the Natarājasvami shrine, in the Vaṭāraŋyeśvara temple at Tiruvālangādu records in the eleventh year of Nṛpatunga's reign that the Queen Kāḍavan Mahādēviyar made a gift of 108 kalanju of gold to the temple of Tiruvālangādu in the Palayanūrnādu.

94. Ep. Col., No. 457 of 1912.

This is a Tamil stone inscription written in a slab lying in a big irrigation tank in the village of Marudādu which records that in the twelfth year of Kō-Vijaya Nrpatungavarman a certain Kongarayarnina Perumān constructed a bank of stones to the tank at Marudādu and also renovated the head of the irrigation channel.

 Ep. Col., No. 257 of 1912. Tamil. Sixteenth year of Nrpatunga. This is a Tamil inscription found near a Ganeśa image outside Kailāsanātha temple at Paramēśvaramangalam and registers a gift of eleven kalanjus of gold in the sixteenth year of Nrpatunga for offerings to the God Mahādēva in the temple of Śailēśvara at Paramēśvaramangalam. The amount of the gift was deposited on interest with the Ganaperumakkal of Śailēśvara by Nandiniraimati.

 Ep. Col., No. 33 of 1900. Tamil record on the north wall of the Kēśavaperumāl temple at Kūram registers a sale of land.

 Ep. Col., No. 277 of 1902. Venkayya, Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 139.

This inscription records in Tamil that in the twenty-first year of Vijaya-Nrpatungavarman—one Nannan Korran made a gift of twelve Kalanju of gold for a perpetual lamp to the God Mahādēva of Tiruvīratṭanam temple at Tirukōvilūr situated in Kurukkaikūrṛam, a sub-division of Milādu. The citizens of Tirukōvilūr accepted the gift and promised to carry out the donor's wish.

98. Ep. Col., No. 303 of 1902.

99. Ep. Col., No. 300 of 1901.

This is a Tamil inscription dated in the twenty-second year of Vijaya Nṛpatungavikramavarman and is found on a pillar in the Śadaiyar temple at Tiruchennambūndi near Kōviladi. The object of the inscription is to record the gift of gold by a Pallava Queen to the temple of Tirukadaimudi-Mahādēva.

 Ep. Col., No. 301 of 1901. Same year, gift by another individual to the same temple.

101. Ep. Col., No. 17 of 1895.

This inscription is found at the Virattanesvara temple at Kandiyur and is dated in the twenty-first year of Vijaya-Nrpatungavikramavarman.

 Ep. Col., No. 37 of 1900.
 This is a much damaged Tamil inscription engraved on 26 a pillar on a Siva temple and dated in the twenty-first year of Nrpatungavarman's reign. It records a resolution of the Assembly at Kūram.

103 Ep. Col., No. 84 of 1892.

This Tamil inscription found in a niche of the north wall of the prakāra of the Saptarshiśvara temple at Lālguḍi is dated in the twenty-second year of Kōvijaya Nrpatungavikramavarman and registers a gift of lamp and offerings to God.

104. Ep. Col., No. 179 of 1915.

This is a Tamil inscription inscribed on a beam in the Venketēśaperumāl temple at Tirumukkūdal in the Madurāntakam Taluk dated in the twenty-fourth year of Vijaya Nṛpatungavarman. Its object is to register a gift of gold to the temple of Vishnubhatāra by Arīgandaperumānār, son of Kādupaṭṭi-Muttaraiyar. The Assembly of Śiyyapuram in the Ūṛrukāṭtukoṭṭam took charge of the gift.

Five Bana inscriptions. Ind. Ant., 1911, April, p. 113;
 T. A. G. Row, Ep. Col., No. 228 of 1902.

This inscription found in the Paramesvara temple at Gudimallam in Kāļahasti zamindari is dated in the twenty-fourth year of Vijaya Nrpatungavarman while Māvali-Vāṇarāya was ruling the west of the Vadugavaļimērku. It makes mention of the members of the Assembly of Tiruviprambēdu, which is mentioned as being situated in Śilainādu a subdivision of Tiruvēngadakōttam.

106. Ep. Col., No. 397 of 1905.

This Tamil inscriptional fragment found on the ceiling of the mandapa in front of the Varadarājā temple at Kāveripākkam records the gift of gold in the twentyfifth year of Vijaya Nrpatungavikrama.

107. Ep. Col., No. 394 of 1905. Undated.

This inscription found in the north wall of the mandapa in front of the Varadarājā temple at Kāveripākkam mentions Māngādunadu, a sub-division of Paduvūrkottam and Kāvidipākkam, alias Avaninārāyanachaturvēdimangalam in the same kottam.

108. Two Ambur Inscriptions. Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. iv, pp. 182, 183 and plate.

The two slabs bear on their top a Tamil inscription and below on a counter-sunk surface a bas relief representing a warrior holding a bow and sword. These are dated in the twenty-sixth year of Kō-Vijaya Nrpatungavarman and record the death of the servant of Pirudi Gangarāyar when the army of the Nolamba attacked Amayūr, in Mēl-Adayārunādu, a sub-division of Paduvūrkōttam for lifting cattle. (Dr. Hultzsch held the view that Pirudi-Gangarāyar of these inscriptions is perhaps identical with the Western-Ganga King Prthivīpati I.)

 Copper-Plate Inscription of the sixth year of Nrpatungavarman. Sewell's List of Antiquities, vol. ii, No. 209, p. 30.

A set of seven copper-plates having a seal with several emblems the principal figure being a bull. The language of the first three plates is Sanskrit in the old Grantha characters, the remaining plates in Tamil. The object of the record is to record the grant of Śri-Nṛpatunga, in the sixth year of his reign, a gift of the village of Pratimadēvi-Chaturvēdimangalam to certain Brahmans. The genealogy of the donor is traced from Vishņu to Pallava through Āngirasa, Bharadvāja, Drōṇa and Drōni, and from Pallava through Harigupta, Aśokavarman, Kalarvyavarma, Narasimha, Mahēndra, Nṛpati, Rājasimha, to Śrī-Dantivarman the father of the donor.

INSCRIPTIONS OF MISCELLANEOUS PALLAVA CHIEFS OF THE SECOND HALF OF THE NINTH CENTURY

Kampavarman. Ep. Col., No. 64 of 1898.
 Tamil inscription dated in the sixth year of Vijaya-Kampavarman recording gift of gold to the Vishnu temple at Gövardhana at Uttaramallür.

- 111. Another Tamil Record, Ep. Col., No. 398 of 1905, dated in the sixth year of the same king's rule but fragmentary, is found in the Varadarāja-perumāl temple at Kavēripākkam.
- 112. Ep. Col., No. 3 of 1898.

reign.

- Tamil inscription written in the west wall of the Vaikuntha-perumāl temple at Uttaramallūr records the gift of gold to the Mahādēva in the neighbouring village in the eighth year of the reign.
- 113. Ep. Col., No. 85 of 1898. Records a sale of land, in the eighth year.
- 114. Ep. Col., No. 6 of 1898, found in the Vaikunthaperumāl temple wall records a gift to Mahāvishņu, and is dated in the eighth year of the same reign.
- 115. Ep. Col., No. 7 of 1898. Tamil inscription in the walls of the Vaikunthaperumāl temple at Uttaramallur. Incomplete. Records a sale of land in the ninth year of Vijayakampavarman's
- 116. Ep. Col., No. 429 of 1902; Ep. Ind., vol. vii, pp. 192-3. Tamil inscription, dated in the eighth year of Vijayakampavarman's reign written in a long stone in a tope opposite to the ruined Isvara temple at Solapuram near Vellore. The record consists of two Sanskrit verses and a half in the Grantha characters and a passage in Tamil prose. The Tamil portion which is dated in the eighth year states that a chief named Răjāditya built a Siva temple and a tomb in memory of his deceased father Prithivi-Gangarayar. The mutilated Sanskrit portions give a genealogical account of Rajaditya and mentions Madhava as the earliest ancestor of his son Atvivarman, and another whose name is illegible. Rajādityā is described as the son of Prthivi-Gangarayar and the contemporary of Vijayakampa.

117. Ep. Col., No. 11 of 1898.

Damaged Tamil inscription at Uttaramallur Vaikunthaperumal temple, dated in the tenth year of the same king.

118. S.I.I., vol. iii, No. 8, p. 13. Haltzsch.

This Tamil inscription on the south wall of the Vishpu temple at Ukkai records in Tamil that one Sadaiyan gave 400 kādis of paddy to the villagers of Ukkal in the tenth year of Kampavarman to feed the Brahmans.

119. Ep. Col., No. 207 of 1901.

Tamil inscription on the south wall of the Lakshmi-Näräyana temple of Käväntandlam records in the fourteenth year of Kampavarman that one Mänasarpa an inhabitant of Kulanur in Vēngai Nādu made a gift of land to the Vishņu temple at Käväntandlam. (Chenglepat District).

120. Ep. Col., No. 42 of 1898.

Tamil record in the Vaikunthaperumal temple at Uttaramallur registers a gift of gold to the temple in the fifteenth year of Vijayakampavarman.

- Ep. Col., same place. Another damaged. Tamil inscription in the fifteenth year of the same king.
- 122. S.I.I., vol. iii, No. 5, p. 8. Hultzsch.

Tamil inscription engraved on the south wall of the Vishnu temple of Ukkal, dated in the fifteenth year of the reign of Kampavarman. The inscription records that a certain Sadaiyan gave over 1000 kadi of paddy to the Assembly of Ukkal, who pledged themselves to supply in return 500 kadi of paddy per year for some unspecified purpose.

123. Ep. Col., No. 391 of 1905.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved on a stone built into a floor close to the south wall of the Varadarāja-perumāl temple at Kāvēripākkam. It is dated in the seventeenth year of Vijayakampavarman and records a gift of gold and mentions Avani-Nārāyaṇachatur-yēdimangalam, an alternative name of Kāvēripākkam.

124. Ep. Col., No. 208 of 1901.

This Tamil inscription put up in the south wall of the Lakshmi-Nārāyana temple at Kāvāntandlam records in the eighteenth year of Kampavarman the celebration of certain festivals at Manasarpa-Vishougrha.

125. Ep. Col., No. 84 of 1898.

This is a Tamil inscription at the Vaikuntha-perumal temple at Uttaramallur and records the gift of gold in the twenty-first year of Vijayakampayarman for the repair of a local tank.

Ep. Col., No. 86 of 1898. 126.

Tamil inscription on one of the walls of the Vaikunthaperumal temple of Uttaramallur records, in the twenty-third year of Kampa-Peruman, an allotment of gold and paddy.

127. Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 93. Solapuram Tamil inscription. This inscription in the north wall of the Perumal temple at Solapuram near Vellore records the building of a temple of Nărayāna at Kāţţutumbūr, that is, Solavaram called Kanakavalli-Vishnugrha identical with the temple in which the inscription is engraved. Kättutumbür is described as being in Pangala-Nādu, a subdivision of Paduvūr-kottam.

128. Ep. Col., No. 174 of 1912.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved in one of the slabs built into the floor of the Adhipurësvara temple at Tiruvorriyur. The object of the inscription is to record a gift of twenty-seven kalanius of gold for offerings by Pūdi-Arindigai wife of Videlvidugu Ilangovelar of Kodumbalur in Konadu. The amount was placed in the hands of the residents of Vaikattur, a suburb of Yiruvorriyür on interest at three manjadi per kalanju per annum.

129. Ep. Col., No. 357 of 1909.

This inscription is written on a slab set up near the Village Munsiff's śavadi at Olakkur and is a Viragal of the period of Kampaperumal. It records the death of a hero on the occasion when the town was destroyed. The characters in which the inscription is recorded are old enough to be ascribed to the time of the later Pallava kings of the ninth century. The hero who met with his death is represented by a standing figure with a drawn sword in the right hand.

130. Ep. Col., No. 351 of 1908.

This inscription found in the slabs at Vallesvara temple at Mangadu records in the third year of Ko-Vijaya-Aparajitavarman a gift of gold for lamp and offerings to the temple of Tiruveilikil-Mahadeva at Mangadu in Kachchipedu.

131. Ep. Col., No. 158 of 1912.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved on a slab in the floor of the verandah of the Ādhipurēśvara shrine at Tiruvorriyūr belonging to the fourth year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparājitavarman. The object of this record is to register the gift of thirty kalanjus of arkarchemmai gold for a lamp to the god of Tiruvorriyūr (Mahādēva) by Amatti alias Kurumbakoļari a concubine of Vayiramēghan alias Vāṇakōvaraiyar son of Perunangai. The amount was deposited with the Assembly of Ādambākkam a hamlet of Tiruvorriyūr and the Amirtagaņa (committee) on interest of three manjādi per kalanju, every year.

132. Ep. Col., No. 31 of 1912.

This Tamil inscription written on a stone lying in the Matangësvara temple at Satyavëdu is dated in the fourth year of Aparājitavarman records the village of Turaiyūr with its income consisting of pon and puravu for worship in the Mahādēva temple at Matangapalli in Tekkūrnādu a sub-division of Paiyūr-Iļangōttam by Kumarāndai-Kurumbarādittan alias Kādupatti Pērariyan of Sēranādu.

133. Ep. Col., No. 161 of 1912.

This is a stone inscription in Tamil dated in the fourth year of Ko-Vijaya-Aparajitavarman, and records the gift of thirty kalanju of gold for a lamp to the temple of Tiruvorrivur Mahādēva by Sappakkan alias Patradani who was a concubine of Vairameghan alias Vanakovaraiyan son of Śāmi-Akkan. It mentions the assembly of Adambākkam a suburb of Tiruvorriyūr and Amrtagaņattār, the village committee who took charge of the money-gift.

134. Ep. Col., No. 32 of 1912.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved in the Ardhamandapa of the same temple records in the fifth year of Aparājitā gift of 100 sheep for a lamp by Porrinangai wife of Kādupattipērariyan, a chief mentioned in a previous inscription. also mentions the measure called the Videlvidugu.

Ep. Col., No. 190 of 1912. 135.

This Tamil inscription records that in the sixth year of Kö-Vijaya-Aparājitavarman a gift of gold for two lamps by the community of the Mahesvaras which was accepted by the assembly of Manali a village near Tiruvorriyür.

Ep. Col., No. 162 of 1912. 136.

This Tamil inscription on a slab inside the Adhipurësvara temple records in the seventh year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparājitavarman a gift of gold for a lamp to the temple by the Queen Mahadevi Adigal. The Assembly of Adambakkam received it on interest.

137. Ep. Col., No. 159 of 1912.

This is a Grantha-Tamil inscription of the eighth year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparājitavarman engraved on a slab built into the veranda of the Adhipuresvara temple in Tiruvorrivur. The object of the inscription is to record the gift of fifty kalanju of ürkarchemmai gold for offerings and a lamp by Paittangikandan, chief of Kättür in Vadagarai-Innambarnadu in Cholanadu. The provisions made were elaborate and included rice, ghee, plantain, sugar, vegetables, arecanuts, betel-leaves, tender cocoanuts, pancha-gavya, sandalpaste and camphor.

138. Ep. Col., No. 180 of 1912.

This inscription which is found in the temple of Orrimudur records a gift of land by purchase from the residents of Iganaimudur for offering to a shrine called Cholamallesvara by a donor whose name is lost.

139. Ep. Col., No. 435 of 1905.

This inscription in Tamil verse on the south wall of the Vīraṭṭānēśvara shrine at Tiruttaṇi records in the eighteenth year of Vijaya-Aparājitavarman a gift of 1000 kuļi of land by Nambi-Appi to the temple.

140. Ep. Col., No. 433 of 1905.

This is another inscription in Tamil verse in the same place and records that a certain Nambi-Appi built a temple of Tiruttaniyal of granite. The verse is said to have been composed by the kirg whose name is not however given.

141. Udayendiram Plates of Prithivipati II. S.I.I., vol. ii, part iii, p. 380.

Sanskrit and Tamil copper-plates. The Sanskrit portion gives a genealogy of the Ganga-Bāṇa king Prithivīpati II, surnamed Hastimalla (verses 12-23) and the information that, with the permission of his sovereign Parakēsari-Parāntaka I he granted the village of Kadaiköttūr to the village of Udaiyēndra-Chaturvēdimangalam. The Tamil portion gives the boundaries of the granted land and is dated in the fifteenth year of Parāntaka I. The genealogical portion records the military exploits of Prithivīpati I in several verses one of which (verse 18) says that, 'having defeated by force the Pāndya's lord Varaguņa at the head of the great battle of Śrīpurambiya and having thus made his friend's title Aparājita significant, the hero entered heaven by sacrificing his own life.' (It has been surmised from this that the battle of Śripurambiya was fought by the Pallava king Aparājita against Varaguna and that the former had for his ally the Western Ganga king Prithivipati and that the battle ended in favour of Aparajita though his ally lost his life in it.)

Tiruvālangādu plates of Rajendrachola. H. K. Sastri, 142. S.I.I., vol. ii, part iii, No. 205.

> The Tiruvālangādu plates of Rajēndrachola belonging to the sixth year of Rajendra, while describing the achievements of the ancestors of Rajendra, record (verse 49) that the Chola king Aditya having conquered in battle the Pallava with his brilliant army though he was Aparājita, he took possession of his queen, the earth and accomplished his object in this direction too'. This Aparajita is evidently identical with the Aparajita-Vikramavarman whose inscription at Tiruttani is dated in the eighteenth year and who, along with Western Ganga king Prithivipati for his ally, fought against the Pandya king Varaguna at the battle of Śripurambiya.

143. Ep. Col., No. 119 of 1897.

This is a Tamil inscription of the third year of Vijaya-Narasimhayarman and records that Atimatturmarugan, an inhabitant of Pakkam and a servant of Valimadura having recovered the cattle, in a cattle raid fell in the same cause.

Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. iv, p. 177. Kil-Muttugür 144. inscription of Narasimhavarman.

This inscription consists of nine lines on a rough stone slab in Kil-Muttugür, a village in Gudiyattam Taluk of the North Arcot District. The alphabet is in Tamil and resembles the Vatteluttu inscriptions. The inscription records in Tamil the gift of land and houses at Mukkudur to a Brahman in the eighteenth year of Kō-Vijaya Narasimhavarman. Below the inscription is a bas-relief with two central figures of elephant and goose from which Dr. Hultzsch has drawn the inference that Narasimhavarman belorged to the Western-Ganga dynasty.

145. This is an archaic Tamil inscription of the twenty-fourth year of Kō-Vijaya Narasimhavikramavarman and records the death of a hero in the service of Skanda, the Ādhirāja of the Bāṇās and who fell in the recovery of cattle lifted by three persons.

146. Vijaya-Īśvaravarman. Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 24.
This Tamil inscription in Vaţţeluttu characters records in the twelfth year of Vijaya-Īśvaravarman the death of a hero who was killed by a Bāṇā chief called Kārōniri at Śiraiyūr.

147. Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 23.
Two inscriptions in a field at Hanumantapuram in Dharmapuri Taluk, Salem District, record that in the seventeenth year of king Vijaya-Iśvaravarman, Sāttan of Pudūr and Kadadi Kārākkan fell.

148. Ep. Col., No. 150 of 1916.
This is a Tamil inscription engraved on a slab built into the north wall of the Agastyēśvara temple at Poyyanūr, Arkonam Taluk, records in Tamil the gift for offerings in the second year of Vayiramēghavarman for the temple of Tiruvagattiśvarmudaya-Mahādēva at Poygainallūr in Dāmalkottam.

149. Ep. Col., No. 152 of 1916.
This is a similar record dated in the second year of Vayirameghavarman and registers a gift for conducting Śrībali in the temple of Tirukulicharattu Alvar at Palakalam.

150. Kāttirai, Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 25.
This is a Tamil inscription put up on a rock near Tandlam, Arkonam Tafuk, dated in the tenth year of Satti, the king of Kādavas. It consists of two Tamil verses each of which states that a Pallavamahārāja built a sluice for the tank at Tandlam.

 Ep. Col., No. 284 of 1916. Jouveau-Dubreuil, Pall. Ant., vol. ii, pp. 65-6.

This inscription engraved in Pallava-Grantha on a pillar in a rock-cut cave at Mēlachēri, Gingee Taluk, states that the Śiva temple called Śrī-Śikhari-Pallavēśvaram was excavated by King Chandrāditya at Simhapura.

SOME INSCRIPTIONS IN ORIGINAL MAYIDAVOLU PLATES

Ditha[m] | Kāmchīpurato Yuvamahārājo Bhāradāyasagotto Pallavanam Śivakha[m]da vammo Damnakadevapatam anapayati []amhehi dani amha-vejayike ya [dham]m-ayu-bala-vadhanike bamhananam Agivesa sagottasa Puvakotujasa Agi(gi)vesa-sagottasa Goņamdijasa Amdhāpatī (thi) ya-gāmo (Virīpa)ram amhehi udak-ādim sampadato [i] etasa gāmasa Viriparasa sava-bamhadeyapa (r)i(ha)ro(re) vitarāma []] alona [kh]ādakam arathasam (vi) nāyikam aparamparābaliva[dam] abhadapapesasam akūracholakavināsikhat [a] samvāsam [l] etehi anēhicha savabamhadeya-majadaya sava-pariharehi pariharito []] pariharatha pariharapetha cha[]] jo amba-sasaram atichhituna pilā badh[a]karejjā [vāta] kārāpejjā vā tasa ambo Sārīra [m] sāsanam karejāmo [l] sa[m] vachhara [m] dasamam 10 gimhā pakho chhatho 6 divasam pamehami 5 [1] anati sayatti datta

Ep. Ind., vol. vi, pp. 86-8.

BRITISH MUSEUM PLATES OF CHARUDĒVI
Siddha || Siri-Vijaya-Khandavam[m]a-Mahārājassa
Samvachchar[ā] . . [i] yuvamahārājassa Bhāraddāyassa Pallavānam si(r)i-Vijaya-Buddhavammassadevī [Bu]ddhi. kurajānavī (janani) Chārudevi ka [dake] viya . . (vīyāpatam) Rājatalākahet [th]e pāṇiya (paniya-kupād) pād pāse Ātukassa kasita-(Kasitavvam) chhettam Dālūre Kūļi-Mahātaraka pattikā [il].

(Mahātaraka) devakula [ssa] bhagavan-Narāyaņassa amham āyu-balavaddhāniyam kātūņa bhūmī-nivattaņā chattāri 4 amhehim sampadattā [|] tam nātūņa gāmeyi(ya)kā āyuttā savva-pariharēhi pariharatha pariharāpe [tha] [|] Ānatti Rohan(i)gu[tt] ātti.

Ep. Ind., vol. viii, p. 145.

TRICHINOPOLY INSCRIPTION OF MAHENDRAVARMAN 1
कावरोत्तयनाभिरामसिल्छामाराममालाधरां
देवो वीक्य नदोप्रियः प्रियगुणामध्येष रज्येदिति ।
साशङ्का गिरिकन्यका पितृकुलं हिल्लेह मन्येगिरी
नित्यन्तिष्ठति प्रलुक्स्यद्यितामेतां हुवाणा नदीम् ॥ 1 ॥
गुणभरनामनि राजन्यनेन लिङ्गेन लिङ्गिनि ज्ञानम् ।
प्रयताञ्चिराय लोको विष्वञ्चन्तेः प्रावृत्तम् ॥ 2 ॥
चोलविष्यस्य शैलोमोलिरिवायं महामणिरिवास्य ।
हरगृहमेतज्ञयोतिस्तदीयमिव शांकरं उद्योतिः ॥ 3 ॥
शिलाकारेण जनिता सत्यसन्धस्य भौतिकी ।
मूर्तिः कोर्तिमयोचास्य कृता तेनैव शाश्वतो ॥ 4 ॥
निष्कृत्य चला समधायि गुणभरे मक्तिः—

S. I. I., vol. i, p. 28.

214 History of the Pallavas of South India

Sivamangalam Inscription
लक्षिताङ्करेण राज्ञाविनभाजनप्रकृतेश्वरस्नाम । कारितमेतत् खेथाच्छाच्छकरण्डमिव पुण्यरसानाम् ॥ Ep. Ind., vol. vi, p. 320.

DALAVÄNUR INSCRIPTION OF NARENDRA दण्डानतनरेन्द्रेण नरेन्द्रेणैपकारितः । शतुमछेन शैलेस्मिन् शत्रुमछोश्वरालयः ॥

Ep. Ind., vol. xii, p. 225.

APPENDIX B

THE MAHAVAMSA, Ch. XLVII

AND when that King Hattha-datha II was dead Manavamma became king. (Who is this Manavamma?), what family came he from, and whose son was he, and how did he take possession of the kingdom? He was sprung from the race of Mahasammata, and inherited the great virtues of that line of princes. He was the son of Kassapa, who destroyed the Thuparama. And bis queen was Sangha, the daughter of the Raja of Malaya. After he had obtained the hand of this princess in marriage he lived secretly with her in the northern country until it came to the ears of Hattha-datha, whereupon he went over to India and having made himself known to King Narasiha, he entered his service and with much labour found favour in the sight of that king. And when he saw that the king's friendship was unfeigned, he brought his wife also to India and lived there with her, ministering to the king by day and night and another king, Kanduvethi, with whom also he had found favour gave him such great possessions that it seemed as if the whole of that king's dominions had been granted to him; and while he was living in this way his wife Sangha hore him four sons and four daughters.

And it happened one day as the king, Narasiha, was out on his elephant on pleasure attended by Māṇavamma, he became thirsty and drank of the water of a tender cocoanut sitting on his elephant and gave the nut (of which he had drunk with the water that was left therein) to Māṇavamma thinking him to be some other attendant. And Māṇavamma took the nut that was offered to him and communed thus with himself: 'This king is a friend to me and, considered in its true light, what is there mean or degrading in eating the remnants of that which another had partaken? It can in no wise harm me, therefore, to drink this.' Then he drank off the nut. Yes, so great are the efforts of exceeding prudent men who are resolved to overcome difficulties! And the king (happening at that moment to turn round) perceived the error he had made, and fearing (lest what he had done should grieve his friend, and desiring also to repair the wrong he had unwittingly done to him) seized the nut and himself drank off what had been left in it by his friend. In such manner do honourable men always conduct themselves.

Thenceforth the king Narasiha placed Manavamma on an equal footing with himself, regarding food, and lodging, and honour and equipage.

And while they were living there together, a king, Vallabha, came to make war against Narasiha. And the king Narasiha reflected within himself in this wise: 'This man (Manavamma) has served me diligently by day and night, so that with my help he might obtain the kingdom which is his birthright. Wherefore if he should now follow me to the place of battle and lose his life in the field, his purpose, and my desire also to help him, would be of no avail.' Therefore the king left Manavamma in the city, and went alone to the place of battle, and began to prepare for war against Vallabha. And (after his departure) Manavamma thought to himself: 'It would advantage me no wise to survive the king if he should be slain in battle (as I would then be left without a friend and with none to help me). If such an event should happen, my friendship should have been formed in vain. For what purpose, besides, has the king treated me as an equal (unless he expected that I might be of service to him in difficulties)? Wherefore it is meet that I should follow the king to the place of battle, and join him in the field, and share either of defeat or victory, of life or of death, with my friend the king.' And for this end he raised a large army, and having equipped it fully, he mounted on a noble elephant and set out for the place of battle, and showed himself before Narasiba. And king Narasiha was greatly delighted at the sight, and exclaimed with great emotion, 'Surely, now know I the trust I had placed on him has been rightly placed.'

And afterwards the forces of Māṇa as well as those of the king joined together, and crushed the army of Vallabha.

And Manavamma displayed great valour in the field of battle, beating down the enemy on all sides like unto Narayana in the battle of the gods. And Narasiha was greatly pleased with the valour of Manavamma, and embraced him fondly, and exclaimed, 'Of a truth thou hast been to me the giver of victory!' And he returned thence to his own city and held a feast in honour of his victory, and rewarded the army of Manavamma with all the honours that were due. And in course of time the king thought thus within himself. 'This my friend has left naught undone to prove his love for me; he is no longer my debtor. My debt to him must I now repay by what it is my duty to do, even though grateful men are hardly found who know the value of services done for them.' He then assembled his officers together and spake to them in this wise: 'You yourselves are witnesses of the deeds of valour done by my friend here. And now it is my duty to do for him that which will be a benefit unto him, remembering that to give help unto one who had given help in the past, is the duty of the righteous man.' And when these words were said, all the ministers replied, 'Whatsoever your majesty desireth, even that is our desire also.'

And the king then granted unto Māṇavamma an army with all the equipage and material and all kinds of artificers, and gave him leave to proceed (to his country and gain for himself the sovereignty thereof). And when Māṇavamma was leaving the country together with his army, the king wept sore as if he had been separated from his own son.

Manavamma then took ship and crossed the sea (with his army), and having made a fast voyage, landed at Lanka with his forces, and began to subdue the country (around).

And when Dathopatissa heard of this invasion, he fled (from the capital); and Māṇavamma entered the city and took it, and tarried not to be crowned, but straightway closely pursued the fugitive king (taking with him only a small force). (But he was soon compelled to give up the pursuit, for) that portion of his Tamil army that he had left in the city deserted from him when false tidings were brought that he had been stricken with a serious illness. And Dathopatissa also, when he heard of this defection, raised a large army and prepared for war against Māṇavamma, who, when he saw that (save a few followers) his whole army had deserted from him, and that (if he should carry on the war with so small a force) his enemy might get a chance to triumph over his defeat and his death, resolved to return to India and pursuade his friend to help him yet another time, by giving him an army to conquer the kingdom. Accordingly he returned to India, and showed himself again to his friend, Narasiha, and entered his service a second time, and having regained his favour, dwelt at his court until four kings had reigned in this island.

And Narasiha thus thought within himself: 'This my friend, who seeketh most resolutely after fame, hath now spent many years of his life in my service that so he might get back his kingdom. And lo! he will soon have grown old. How then can I now reign (in comfort) and see him (thus miserable). Assuredly I shall this time restore to him his kingdom by sending my army thither. Else what advantageth my life to me?' Thereupon the king gathered his army together, and having equipped it well, gave Māṇavamma all things that he desired to have, and himself accompanied the army to the sea-coast where a mighty array of ships of burden, gaily ornamented, had been prepared for them. And when the king reached the harbour he gave orders to all his officers that they should embark and accompany Māṇavamma; but they all, showed unwillingness to do so (without their king).

And Narasiha, having pondered well over the matter, resolved on this stratagem. Keeping himself so that his army might not see him, he gave over to Māṇavamma all his retinue and insignia of royalty together with the ornaments with which he adorned his person, and sent him (secretly) on board the ship, bidding him take the royal drum the kottha with him, and sound it from the deck of the vessel. And Māṇavamma did as he was directed; and the soldiers thinking that it was the king (who was sounding the call), embarked, leaving him alone on land. Then Mana began his voyage with the army and all the material of war, which, with the ships in which they were borne, was like unto a city floating down the sea. And in due time reached the port and disembarked with the army. And after the men had been made to rest there for a few days, he began to fight, and took the northern country and subdued the inhabitants thereof, and then put himself at the head of his invincible army and marched against the city. And Potthakuttha, having heard thereof, went forth with a large army to meet the enemy. And the two armies encountered each other like unto two seas that had burst their bounds. And, Manavamma clad himself in his armour, and led his men, mounted on his elephant; and he broke through the forces of Pottha-kuttha and the king (Hattha-dattha), and scattered them on all sides. And Hattha-dattha, the king, as he was fieeing from the field of battle, was seized by some country people. And they cut off his head and brought it to Manavamma.

And Pottha-kuttha, who escaped from the field of battle, took refuge in Merukandara. And the lord of that country (from whom he sought protection), when he saw him (under his roof), communed thus within himself, 'Yea, now for a long time has this man been my friend; how can I reject him, nor yet how can I keep clear of offence to my lord the king and to this my friend?' And so (as he could not escape from this portion by reason of its hardship, he resolved to kill himself, and) ate of some poisoned cakes, so that he died. And when Pottha-kuttha heard what had befallen his friend, he ate also of one of the cakes and died. Thus did the island fall into the hands of Māṇavamma, freed from dangerous foes that are like unto thorns.

And Manavamma then lifted his parasol of sovereignty over the island, as if he thereby sheltered the inhabitants thereof from the afflictions which had rained on them. And the good deeds that he did were many in number and of great value. Who can enumerate them all one by one? And this great and renowned man built these buildings: the terraced house called Kappagama, Sepanni, Siriat Padhanarakha Vihara, and the beautiful terraced house at Siri Sanghabodhi Vihara. He covered also the roof of the house at Thuparama. And he built a terraced house at the Thuparama and gave it to the Pansukulika monks. He repaired also the old canopy on the top of the Cetiya and many buildings there that had gone to decay.

220 History of the Pallavas of South India

APPENDIX C

THE 'AVANTISUNDARIKATHĀSARA'

THE Avantisundarikatha and the Avantisundarikathasara are two old Sanskrit manuscripts discovered by the search party of the Madras Oriental Manuscript Library some years ago. 1 Of these the former is a prose work with a poetic introduction while the other is a summary of this work in verse. While the MSS. are interesting to the students of Sanskrit literature the poetical introduction prefixed to the prose work is of particular interest to the students of Pallava history inasmuch as it shows the literary patronage of some of the Pallava kings of the Simhavishnu line and the connection of some of the well-known Sanskrit poets with Kanchipuram. It is agreed that this prose work was written by Dandin and the introductory chapter gives some valuable data for fixing the date and place of Dandin and his connection with Bharavi as well as the Pallava kings and their interest in architecture and literature. The literary and historical importance of the work have been discussed in full by Mr. Ramakrishnakavi in his paper on ' Avantisundarikatha of Dandin's which may be referred to. Mr. Harihara Sastri of Trivandrum has questioned the tenability of the identity of Damodara and Bharavi and the relationship of Bhāravi and Dandin suggested by Mr. Kavi in the light of his discovery of the corresponding prose passage from Trivandrum The following are extracts from Manuscript Library. Mr. Ramakrishnakavi's edition which has the advantage of supplying a number of correct readings not found in the Manuscript acquired by the Government Oriental Manuscript Library.

See para 108, of the Report on the working of Perip. party of Goverment Oriental Manuscript Library, Madras, for 1916-17 to 1918-19.
Proc. and Trans. of the Second Oriental Conference, Calcutta, pp. 192-200. See his paper in the Fourth Session of the Oriental Conference entitled 'Bharavi and Dandin'.

। श्रीः।

॥ अवन्तिसुन्दरीकथासारः ॥

सरक्याक्यनप्रोत्या तथापि कथयाम्यहम् ।
कान्तामबन्तिसुन्दर्याः कथामनतिविस्तराम् ॥	Il so II
अस्तिप्रासाद विस्तारप्रस्तव्योमान्तरा पुरी ।
काञ्चोपुराख्या कल्याणी ककु (भः) कुम्भजन्मनः ॥	- 11 44 11
या मृत्यविगठद्रोगै रसंख्यवसमिर्जनैः ।
भोगवत्यमरावत्यी न्यक्कुर्वाणेव गर्विता ॥	11 85 11
तस्यां जज्ञे बुधवातध्यस्तास्विलविपहुवः ।
प्लुवेषु महोपालः सिंहविष्णुरिति श्रुतः ॥	n iś n
गरिम्णा स्थावरान् सर्वानोजसा अञ्जन्मानिप ।
यो विजिन्ये भृतश्चाची भूभर्तृनुभयानपि ॥	1 88 1
अदृष्ट्यूबी गन्धर्वस्तं सभासदसेकदा ।
उद्बलिर्महोपालगुपाबीणयदार्यया ॥	1991
दन्जपतिहृदयभूषर-
विभेदविज्ञातशक्तिनखकुलिशम्।
जगदुदयहेतु विष्णो~
रवत् अपनीरसिंहं वः ॥	1 8€ 1
श्रत्वेनामत्यदारार्थी कुत्रूहत्स्वत्य (ली) कृतः ।
अत्रबीद्धद्व केनेयं निर्मिता वर्णपद्धतिः ।	11 60 11

इत्यूचिवांसं प्रत्यूचे गन्धर्वस्तं धने (रे) श्वरम् ।
देव सनुगृहोतोऽस्मि श्रूपतामवधानतः ॥	11.55.11
अस्यानन्दपुरं नाम प्रदेशे पश्चिमोत्तरे ।
आर्थदेशशिखारतं तत्रासन् बहवो द्विजाः ॥	1 99 1
ततोऽभिनिःसुता काचिन् कौशिकव्रह्मसन्तिः।
ब्रझलोकादिबायन्ती पुण्यतीर्था सरस्तती ।	11 70 11
नासिक्यभूमाबौत्सुक्यान्मूलदेवनिवेशिताम् ।
प्राप्याचलपु (रं नाम पु) रोमधिवसत्यसी ॥	1 78 11
तस्यां नारायणस्वामिनाम्नो नारायणोदरात ।
दामोदर इति श्रीमानादिदेव इवाभवत् ॥	11 77 1
स मेधावी कविर्विद्वान् भारविः प्रभ (वं) वो गिरा
अनु रूथ्याकरोन्मैं तो नरेन्द्रे विष्णुवर्धनी (ने) ॥	11 77 1
क्षुचाविष्टेन तदिद्रमामिषं मृगयान्तरे ।
अनिष्ट शिष्टं हा ! कष्टं तेनाभोज्यमभुज्यत ॥	1 58 1
अगचनितकं पित्रोः सतपस्तोर्थयात्रया ।
चरन् भेवर (१) मापेदे कस्यापि शुभजन्मनः ॥	11 79 11
स दुर्विनीतनामासीदनन्वर्थाभिधानवान् ।
तस्यान्तिको वसत्येष तेनार्येयमुदीरिता ॥	1 75 1
इति श्रुंबा महीपालस्तदालोकनलोलुप: ।	- 14
अनेकश्रोम्खाकृष्टमकरोदम्मात्मसात् ॥	1 66 1
खर्विशेषे इर्विगतैस्तमाचारैस्तोषयत् ।	* 1
अभूषयच भूपाकमप्राम्यैः स सुभाषितैः ॥	1761
4	14.

29

अवन्तिसुन्दरोकथासारः

अस्ति विज्ञाप्यमस्माकमन्तर्प्रोद्योऽस्मि यद्यहम् ।
प्रार्थनां वितथीकर्तुं प्रभवो न भवादशाः ॥	180
महामलुप्रे देवः सौरं वारिधिसन्निधी ।
आस्ते मुकुन्दः सानन्दं फणींद्र इव मन्दिरे ॥	11 86
मग्नः केनापि तस्यासीत् कारणेनासुरद्विषः।
मणिबन्धे महाबाहुः स मया सन्धितोऽधुना ।	1881
तदालोकितुमहीनित भवन्तः साधु वा न वा ।
एतावता प्रथासेन प्रसादातिशयोऽस्तु नः ॥	1841
श्रुवा सेनापतेः पतः कलाकीशकपेशछः ।
पार्श्ववर्ती परां मैत्रों विश्वइण्डिनमस्यवात् ॥	1881
आर्य संभाव्यतामस्य स्थपतेः प्रणयस्वया ।
अपि च स्पृहणीयं ते सुहदामिप दर्शनम्।	1891
मिताणि मातृदत्ताचाः करेळम्यो द्विजीत्तमाः।	-
ल्बइर्शनार्थमायातास्तिस्मन् सिन्नद्धत्यमी ।	1881
इति श्रुत्वा ततः प्रोतस्तं विसुउथपरेऽहनि ।	,
सुहद्भिः सह तं देशं ययौ तेन च शिल्पिना ॥	1801
अथोत्तरङ्गभङ्गास्त्रोबिस्सद्वाहुलीलया ।
नृत्यन्तिमिव सम्भीसमम्भोराशिं ददर्श सः ।	1861
ततः सागरकछोस्रक्षिप्तक्षोदाम्युविन्द्ना ।
सेव्यमानं सुखामोदल्लारिणा बनवायुना ॥	1881
तत्रोदारं मुदा पश्यनदूरे राजमन्दिरम् ।	- "
गच्चन वेळापयेनाथ प्रपेदे मन्दिरं हरे: ॥	14.
	1905

अवन्तिसुन्दरीकथासारः

पृथुकान्तिमवन्तिसुन्दरीति प्रथितां विक्रमरत्नराजहंसाम् । सरसां रहसि प्रियामिवादी-मुपलेभे पृक्षोत्तमप्रसादात् ॥

11 93 11

मुक्तवा शब्यां मिलितपुलकत्रातमुखाय मूयः प्राप्तानन्दो विरतिसमये प्राक्तनोनां क्रियाणाम् । स प्रारेभे सपदि सक्कां खप्तलब्धां सुदृद्ग्यः शुश्रूष्म्यः पृथुमथ कथां विस्तरेणाभिधातुम्

11 83 11

इसवन्तिसुन्दरीकथासारे प्रथमः परिच्छेदः ॥

ADDITIONAL NOTES BY THE EDITOR

Page 10, note 2.

This work traces the descent of Dandin in its introductory chapter. In doing so it brings his great grandfather Gopala as a fellow-pupil of Bhāravi whom it brings into contact with three kings of South India, namely, Vishnuvardhana, the father of Jayasimha I of the Chālukyas of Bādāmi; of Durvinīta, among the Gangas who was his own pupil and commented up on the 15th Sarga of the Kiratarjunīya and wrote a Sanskrit version of the Bṛhatkatha and Simhavishnu of Kanchi. These details come out clearly from the MS. copy of the prose work Avantisundarikathā, not the versified sāra or abridgement, as shown by Pandit Harihara Sastri, Curator of Sanskrit MSS., Trivandram, in a paper presented to the fourth Oriental Conference in Allahabad.

Page 11, note 2.

The discovery of these panels raises the question as to the religion of the kings and the existence of the place. Simhavishou was a Vaishnava as he is described as Simhavishou who worshipped Vishou in devotion; Bhaktyārādhita Vishouh Simhavishouh. His son and successor Mahendra is said to have been a Jain originally and then become a convert to Saivism through Appar. It seems likely that he was Jain as in the Mattavilāsa he brings into ridicule the Saiva Kāpālika and the Sākyas or Buddhists. He has no reference to the Jains. His father's devotion to Vaishņavism may explain its omission. His portrait in the Varāha cave may be due to the fact that he was there a prince with his father and like him, he may then have been a Vaishņava. This raises the question of the origin of the place. There is little doubt that the place existed before whatever Mahamalla may have done to enlarge and beautify it.

Page 101, note 1.

The style of pillar described does mark a distinct class of pillars. If Mahamalla originated it, as probably he did, his successors continued it, and we find this kind of pillar in buildings of later times of different ages. To mark it distinctly as having been originated by Mahāmalla we want a few undoubted examples of these ascribable to his age. We cannot say we get that in Mahābalipuram.

Page 102, note 1.

There is no evidence in support of the assertion that Narasimhavarman Mahāmalla founded the town. town had the vernacular name Mallai and in that name was known earlier, as Bhūtattāļvār, a native of the place refers to the place by that name. Tirumangai Alvar a contemporary of Nandivarman Pallavamalla refers to the place as kadal mallai-Talasayanam, meaning Mallai close to the sea which is otherwise known Talasayanam, lying on land. This last is in reference to Vishnu who is abed on the earth, as though on the sea usually, to let a devotee have a view of him in that posture. It was called kadal-Mallai to distinguish it from other Mallais clearly indicating that it is an ordinary native name. This is distinct from the Māmallapuram given to it by Mahāmalla, as is very commonly the case in South India. The village Mallai became the city Māmallapuram by this rechristening. Pandit M. Raghavaiyangar has suggested, from a reference in the Sangam classic Perumbanaryuppadai, the identification of this place with Nirpeyarttu in the poem in the Journal of Oriental Research. This term means that which has the name of water and the Pandit finds justification for it in the name Jalasayanam given to the Shoretemple in one of the later inscriptions. Tirumangai Alvar's reference is Talasayanam and not Jalasayanam. It would be difficult to find a reason for the alteration. It must also be noted that Jalasayanam is given to the Siva shrine in the inscription. While the Pandit deserves credit for the suggestion, Nir-peyarttu is more likely to refer to another place Tiru-Nir-Malai near Pallavaram and the poem has to be examined closely to see whether this is the place actually meant. (See Indian Antiquary, 1917; The Antiquities of Mahabalipuram, pp. 49 ff.)

Page 120, note 2.

The views of the late Mr. H. K. Sastri seem to have been due entirely to a misconstruction of the sloka in the Tandantottam plates and a misunderstanding of the word punah (again). The previous verse refers to the conquest of the south and refers obviously to the exploits of Simhavishnu of the main line. From these the genealogy passes on to the descendants of his younger brother Bhimavarman. The first important character in this line is Hiranyavarma whose son Nandivarman Pallavamalla became a great Pallava ruler. The poet apparently spoke of Simhavishnu as an avatar of Vishnu and refers to Hiranya similarly as a second avalar of the same Vishnu (Bhuranyutējah). The use of the punah (again) is then quite justified. There is no need to identify this Nandivarman with Nandi of Tellaru and create difficulties to surmount. The first is given his peculiar title Ekadhira and he is described as a Paramavaishnava. The other is described as an equally devout Saiva. Each of them gives himself credit for such allegiance in religion in the concluding verses. There is no room for a second Hiranyayarma nor is there any need.

Page 138, note 2.

The name of this author Perundevanār and his work Bharatavenbā have been too readily identified with the author Bhāratam-pādiya Perundevanār and his Bhāratam. The first refers himself and his work to the reign of Nandivarman of Tellaru and therefore to the ninth century beyond a doubt. In regard to the other however we have neither the work nor any extracts. He is regarded as the author of the invocatory poems to the eight Sangam collections of which the Ahananuru collection was made for Ugra-Pāndya by Rudra Śarman. An ancient Pāndya, anterior to the genealogical lists, is given credit for having got the Bharatam done into Tamil in the larger Sinnamanur plates. This achievement is put on a footing of equality with the victory at Talaialanganam and the establishment of the Sangam in Madura. In the face of these distinctive features the identifications of the two Perundevans would be impossible and the Bharatam of the earlier Perundevan cannot be the venta that has come down to us in part.

ERRATA

Page	Line
39	25 for	Kulimaharatha, read Kulimahataraka.
42	12 for	Simhavarman and Skandavarman, read Mädhavavarman.
71	15 for	Simbayarman, read Mādhayayarman.
71	25 for	fifth, rend fourth.
11	29 for	sixth, read fifth.
104	12 for	circa 600, read circa 655.
$108 \left\{ \begin{smallmatrix} f.n. & 2 \\ line & 1 \end{smallmatrix} \right\}$	for	श्चण read रक्षण.
,, 2	tor	अवारप्य read अवाप्य.
113 Gen. Ta	ble for	Simhavarman read Simhavishnu.
116 { f.n. 1 } line 8 }	for	Malaprakritis, read Mulaprakritis.
137 { f.n. 2 }	for	the work, read of the work.
160	7 for	Sundanar, read Sundarar.
169	2 for	vol. xiv, read vol. xv.

N.B.-A few other errors mostly in discritical marks have not been noticed here as being too obvious.

INDEX

(References are to pages)

A

Adambakkam, Assembly of, 154,

Adeya, 153

Aditya I, Chola king, conquest of Tondamandalam by, 133, 134 Adityavarman, Pallava, 83

Adivarāhasvāmi temple, royal sculptures at, 87

Adondachola, 25, 27

Adondaichakravarthi, 13, 14

Agastyësvara temple, at Poyyanür, 144

Aggalanimmati, Kadamba princess, 73, 135

Agnishtoma, 34, 37

Airandapalla, identification of, 45 Ajavarman, Kadamba king, 73 Ajjhitabhattārika, Kadamba princess, 72

Alinādu, 131 Aluptakāma (-Mahendravarman

Amaravati, 34, 37, 41

Amātya, 38

Amogavarsha, 139 Anantasivāchārya, 107

Andhrapatha, 33, 34, 37

Angirasa, 47 Ankura, a title, 21

Anniga, 145

Aparājitavarman— Campaign against Pandyas, 142

Defeat by Aditya, 143 Later Pallava King, 141-43

Monuments of, 143
Appar (-Tirunāvukkarasar), 30,
31; age of the activity of, 88,

90, 159 Araisur, Varaguna encamped at, 136

Architecture, Longhurst, on the value of a study of for fixing the date of monuments, 100-1

Areca nuts, duties on, 153

Arichit (= Arisil), battle of, 139,

Arivarana, War-elephant, 105 Arivarman (Aryavarman), 42

Arthasastras, 38 Arovāļar, 9

Ashtabhuja, temple of, in Kanchi,

126

Ashlādasaparihāras, 38, 151

Asokarāja, 27, 28, 38

Asokavarman, 20, 47, 48, 49, 50 Asvamedha, 21, 34, 37, 126n

Attisaya, Pallava war-horse of Paramësvaravarman I, 105

Alyanlakāma (Paramēšvaravarman I), 107

Avanibhājana, identification of, 11, 86

Avanināraņan (- Nandivarman III), 138

Avaninārayaņa-Chaturvedimangalam (-Kaveripakkam), 154,

Avanisimha, see Simhavishnu Avantisundarikathāsāra, 1, 10, 43, 81, 158 see also App. C, pp. 223 ff

Āvamukta, Nīlarājā of, 45, 47

B

Bahlika, 18 Bāhūr—

Boundaries of villages gifted,

Course of Studies offered in, 141 Endowment to, 149-50

Sanskrit College at, 141 Bappadēva, 33, 24, 35, 36, 38, 39, 50 Bhagavadajjukam, Sans. burlesque, 93m Bhagiratba, Kadamba King, 71 Ballot-box, principle of, understood in Chola times, 155n

Bāņa, 6, 136 feudatory of Nripatunga, 140

Bhairayakonda, 8 Bharala, reading of at the Kuram temple, 107 Bhārataveņba, 82 Bhāravi, 10, 24, 43, 79, 81, 88 at the Pallava Court, 158 Bhāsa, plays of at the Pallava court, 111 Bhimayarman, Pallava, 83, 84 Bhogiyarman, Kadamba King, 73 Bhūta, fiscal term, 153 Bhuvanakosa, 18 Brhat-Bacas, 71 Budānāļi, 152 Buddha, indebted to Vedanta for his doctrines, 27, 95 Buddhavarman, 23, 34 Buddhism, 28, 37; Degenerate state of, 95 Buddyankura, 34, 39 Burnell (Dr.), 2

C

Camps, Pallava royal camps, 54 Ceylon, 13 invasion under Narasimhavarman 1, 99 second naval expedition to, 99, Chalukyas (W.), 6, 10, 17 Chapdadanda, 73 Chandalur plates, 41 Chandraditya, 144 Charudevi, 34, 39 Charuponnera, 145 Chera, 17 Chetihakari (- Mahendravarman 1), 90 Chicacole (- (?) Erandol), 45 Chintamani, 1 Chitramaya, Pallava Prince, 112, 123, 124, 125 Chitramegha Tataka, 155 Chola interreguum, at Kanchi, 63-6, see also Introduction Chola inscriptions, details on local administration in, 155a Chütavana, battle of, 125 identification of, 126 Conjeevaram, see Kanchipuram Copper-plate charters of Pallavas, see App. A, pp. 163-220

D

Dakshināpatha, 18 Dalavanur, 6 Dălūra, 35, 39 Dandin, 10, 24, 43 At the Pallava Court, 110-111 158 Earlier sojourn of, 158 Friends of, 159, see App. C. Dantiga (- Dantivarman), subjugation of by Govinda III, 135 Danti-Nandivarman, 133 Dantipottarasar, 133, see Dantivar-Dantivarman, 131, 132, 133 Reign of, 134-6 Darsi (- Dasanapura?), 41, 62 Dasuapura, 41, 54-5 Identification of, 62 Devarashtra, 45 Identification of, 45m Devendravarman, 45 Dhanam jaya, 45 Dhānyakata (- Dharanikotta,) Amaravati, 34 Dharmapāla, 12, 26 Dharmarajaratha, 8 Digambara Jains, 11, 42 Dharanikondaposar, 114, 116st Dilipa, Nolamba chief, 145 Dramas, intended to be staged at the Pallava court, 159 Durvinita, Ganga King, 10, 43

E

Election principle of, in Village Assemblies, 155 Elliot (Sir W.), I Epigraphy, Dr Fleet on the value of, for research, 4-5 Eri-Vāriya-Perumakkai (= Tank Management Committee), mention of, in Pallava inscriptions, 156s

F

Fergusson (J.), 2 Fleet (Dr.), on epigraphy, 2, 3, 4; Lokavibhāga, 42 Huns, 18

G

Ganesha temple, 106
Ganga-Pallava theory, 132n, see also Introduction
Gangas, 4, 6, 10, 13, 41, 42
Gautamiputra Satakarni, 16, 17, 37
Genealogy of the Early Pallavas,
56-60
Ghafika, 24
Godavari (R.), 37, 45, 46
Goldsmiths, duty on, 152
Gopala Alyar (V.), 137
Gopinatha Rao (T. A.), 4, 91, 136, 140

Governmental organization of the Pallavas, 146-157; affinity to North Indian ones, 148, 148m Govinda III, Invasion of Käüchi by, 135

Govindavarman, Pallava, 83 Govindavarman, Vishnukundin King, 76

Grama, officers in charge of, 148 Gudimallam, 140

Gunabhajana (- Paramesvaravarman I)

Gunabhara, see Mabendravarman I Gupta Era, initial date of, Shama Sastri on, 33

Gupta inscriptions, compared with the Pallava, 153 Gurjara, 18

H

Haribara Sastri, 43n
Harivarman, Kadamba King, 73
Hastivarman of Vengi, 45, 47
Hemāvati pillar inscription, 145
Hirahadagalli plates, 19, 33, 35, 37
Hiranya, revenue term, 153
Hiranyavarma Mahārija, 63, 114
Position of in Pallava genealogy, 116
Hiuen-Tsang, Chinese Pilgrim, 12, 27, 28, 82
Description of the city of Kānchi, 102-3
On state of Buddhism in Kānchi and Pandya country, 103
Visit to Kānchi, 102
Hultsch (Dr.), 2, 6, 33

Identification of Sripurambiyam,

New reading of the Bahur plates, 140s
On the age of Seven Pagodas, 104s
On the identification of Uragapuram, 104s
On the position of Kampavarman, 143, 144

1

Ikshvāku, 17 Ilam-Killi, 29 Iļam-Tirayan (- Topdaman Ilam-Tirayan, 21, 23, 27, 29, 36 Ilawar, 152 Ilavar, 152 Indrabhattārakavarman, Vishņukuņdin King, 76 Inscriptions of the Pallavas, see App. A, pp. 163-220 Iraiyanār - Ahapporuļ, Commentary on, 124

J

Jaina temples in Kānch), 103
Jayavarman, 37
Jouveau-Dubrouil—
On the origin of Pallavas, 19
On the nature of the Gupta invasion in the South, 44-5
On the Vishnukundin origin of Pallava Art, 77-8
On Uragapurum, 104
On Pallava painting, 92-3
On Pallava styles of architecture,
91
Jyeshtapada Somayāji, Brahmin
Scholar, attalaments of, 129-30

K

Kadambas, 24, 89-73 Kadambali, see Mahābalipuram Kailāsanātha temple (— Rājasimhēsvara), 8, 13 Kādavan-Mahādēviyar, Queen, 200 Kadavas, 17 Kakutsthavarman, Kadamba King, 53, 72 Kāļabhartri, 47, 48, 49, 50

Killi, Chola chiefs, 21, 29, 30 Kalabhras, vanquished by Simhavishnu, 84, 85 Kilmāvilangai, 7 Identification of, 85m, 120 Kirātārjuniya, 78, 81 Significance of in Pallava age of, 158 History Introduction Kalavali-Narpatu, 30 Kodukolli Kallar, 25; Relations with Kalalam), 130 bhras, 26 Kalumalam, battle of, 30 Kamandaka, Nitisara of, 148n. Kamāra, 38 Kosala, 44 Kampaperumāļ (~Kampavarinan), 144 Kampavarman (- Vijayakampamandalam, 25, 147 varman), 132-4 Names of, 147n Kāņagopa, 39 Kövür Kilär, 29 Kanchipuram, Pre-Pallava history Krishna Sastri (H) -01, 15-31 Hiuen-Tsang in, 102-3 malla, 119 Invasions of the Chalukyas into, 89, 105, 138 Rashtrakuta invasions into, 126. 127 varman, 67 State of learning in, 71, 110-11, 157 - 58Temples of, 109-10, 114, 131 Under Karikala, 28-30 72, 73 Under the Pallavas of Prakrit Charters, 33 ff Kangavarman, 71 Kaujanur, ancient name of, 87 Kāpālikas, 10 Life of, as described in Mattavilasaprahasana, 91, 95 Karikālachola, 9, 28, 29, 31, 55 kyn), 89 Kudamükku Karnātakas, identification of with Kalabhras, 85n 140 Karpisuta, 130 Karuvur, dest. of, 29 with Kodavāsal, 30 Kättirai, 144 Katumukhaväditra. Pallava Kulumür, battlefield, 123 Musical Instrument, capture of, 121 Kautilya, Arthasastra of, 148n Kuntala, 53 Kāvēripattinam, 9 Kuram, Assembly of, 154 Sea-trade with, 26 Kavyadarsa, of Dandin, 78, 111, 112 Reference to Kanchi in, 111 Kāvyāmīmāmsa, 18 Kurugodu, battle of, 137 Keralaputras, of Asokan inscription, 28 Kēšavaperumāļ temple, at Kuram,

Khatvankhadvaja, Pallava royal emblem, 121

Kirtivarman, raid on Kanchi by, 122 (- Ekadhiramanga-Kodumbalür, battle of, 123 Kondamudi plates, compared with Mayidavolu plates, 36 Koshlakas (Tam. - Kottam), 148 Kottams, division of in Tonda-Duration of the reign of Pallava Identification of the reliefs at Mahabalipuram discussed, 87 On the Omgodu plates of Simha-Krishnaswami Aiyangar, on the origin of the Pallavas, 4, 17-18 Krishnavarman, Kadamba King, Kshatrapas, southward advance of, Kshatryasimhapallavēšvara, Mahabalipuram, 13, 110 Kubëra, of Devarashtra, 45 Kubja-Vishpuvardhana (E. Chalu-(Tirukudamükku) (- Kumbhakonam), battle of, Kudavāyil Kottam, identification of. Kulöttungachöla, 25, 26, 27 Kundukūra, Village of, 149m Kunrandarkovil, Pudukotta, 131 Kuram plates, battle of Peruvalanallür, description in, 105, Kurumbabhumi (- Tondamandalam), 27 Kurumbas, 14, 24, 25, 26, 28 Subjugation of, 27 Kurunilamannar, 25 Kustnalapura, Dhanamjaya of, 45

L

Land-Survey, in Pallava records.

Literature, value of, for Pallava History, 8-13 Impetus given to, by the Palla-vas, 157-61

Lökavibhaga, Jaina work, 11, 42-3, 66 - 7

M

Mackenzie (Col. C.), work of, 26 Mackenzie MSS., 1, 24-5 Mādhava II (W. Ganga), 42 Madhavavarman I, Vishnukundin King, 76

Mahabalipuram - Sevru Pagodas, Māyalivaram, Mallal, Kadanmallai, Mahamallapuram, 2, 7, 8, 13, 39

Discussion on the age of, 101-2

Monoliths at, 100-2

Naval base for Ceylon invasions,

Port of, reference in Tirumangai Alvar to, 99, 99n, 100 Royal statues at, 87-8

Mahendrapotadhirajan, see Mahen-

dravarman I, 88

Mahākāntāra, Vyāgrarāja of, 44, 45 Mahamalla, see Narasimbayarman l see Mahabali-Mahamallapuram, puram

13, 98; Account Mahavamsa, relating to Manavamma, App.

Mahayana Buddhism, State of, at Känchi, 103

Mahēndragiri, 45

Mahëndrapala, 18 Mahendrapura (= Mahendravādi),

Mahendratataka, Pallava tank at Mahendravadi, 91

Mahendravādi, 7, 13

Vishnu temple at, 90, 91 Mahendravarman I, 6, 8, 10, 48, 81

Literary achievement of, 93-4 Military events, 89 Painting and music, under, 92-3

Reign of, 88-96

Religious views of, 90, 91 Style of architecture, 91-2

Temples of, 90

Mahendravarman II, 103-4 Mahendravikrama, see Mahendravarman I Mabendravishpugrha, Pallava temple at Mahendravadi, 91 Mahipāla, 18 Majanadu, 85n

Malayas-

Defeated by Simhavishnu, 84, 85 Identification of, 85m

Mallai (- Mahabalipuram), 138 Māmalla style of architecture, 101 Mämandur, Pallava cave at, 6, 7 Tank at, Pallava origin of, 155

Māmbākkam, 149

Manali, ancient name of, 87 Assembly at, 154

Māņavamma Ceylon Prince, 98 At the Pallava court, 99

Mandagapattu, ment in, 6, 7 Pallava monu-Importance of, 91#

Mandhatrivarman, Kadamba King,

Mangala, Nolamba King, 145 Manikkavasagar, age and position of, 160

Manimangala, battle of, 97 Manimakalai, 21, 29, 30 Manipallavam, 21, 22 battle-field (- Mannai-Mannai, kudi, Mamnikurichi, kudi), 123, 126

Mantaraja, of Korala, 45

Maran Sadaiyan, Pandyan King, incursions of into Tondamandalam, 136

Marriages, fee on, 152 Mätridatta, 158

Mattavilāsa, see Mabendravarman

Mattavilāsa Prahasana, 10, 11, 81 Contents of, 93-4 Light thrown by, 94-6

Mayidavolu Plates of Sivaskandavarman, 19, 33, 37, App. A.

(- Mylapore), Pallava Mayilal Capital, under Nandivarman 111, 138

Mēlachēri, Pallava temple at, 7 Melanga, identity of, 38

Menmatüra, 54, 55 Molo-kiu-chi (-Pandya country) visit by Hiuen-Tsang, 103

Mrigësavarman, 71, 72

Mudrārākshasa, mention of Dantivarman in, 159 Muktësvara temple of, at Kanchi,

Mülasthänn temple of, at Tiru-

Muttaralyan, 6, 140

kalukkuuram, 54 Music, inscriptional treatise on, at Kudumlyamalai, 93

Nāgas, 19, 20, 21, 22, 30, 50, 51, 52 Nälanda, University of, 12 Nālāyiraprabhanda, 11, 81

Nallaru, battle of, 137 Nalukaviperumal (-(Tirumangai

A[vār], 131 Nambiyandar Nambi, 160

Nandikkalambakam, 24, 81, 82 Contents of, 136-8

Nandipotarāyar, 133, see Nandivarman III

Naudipotavarman, see Nandivarman II, Pallavamalla

Naudipottarasar (= Naudivarman),

Nandipura (- Nandipuravinnagaram), slege of, 124

Nandipuravippagaram (- Nathankovil Nandipura), 13, 124

Nandivarman III, 11, 46, 47, 82 Campaigns against the Pandyas, 137

Events of the reign, 136-9 Nanmugan Tiruvandadi, 96

Nanniga, 145

Narasimhacharya (R.) on Lokaviolitea, 43

Narasimhayarman I (- Mahamalla). 13

Ceylon invasions, 98-100

Monuments of, at Mahabalipuram, 100-2

Raid on Vātāpi, 98 Reign of, 97-103

Narasimhavishou, see Rajasimha Narayana, temple of, at Dalura, 161 Narendra (- Manendravarman I). 90

Narendrasena, 72

Narrinai, 24

Nayanmurs, age of, 78 Nedumaran, Pandyan king, conversion of, to Saivism, 159

Neduvayal, battlefield, 123 Nellür (- Nellore), battle of, 125 Nelvaylpakkam, 149

Nelvēli, battle of (-Neumali) identification of, 125

Neumalipakkam, 149

Nilarājā, of Āvamukta, 45, 47 Nimbayana-

Battle of, 125 Identification of, 126

Nitisāra, 148n Nolambas, 145

Nolambayadi thirty-two thousand, 145

Nripatungapötarayar - Nripatungavarman), 139

Nripatungavarman, 139-42 Campaigns against the Pandyas,

139-40 Educational endowments under,

Extent of Empire during, 140

Rashtrakuta descent of, 139

Olakkür, destruction of, 144 Orissa, 44

Pahlavas, distinct from Pallavas, 15, 17-18, 22

Painting, vestiges of Pallava, at Sittannavasal, 92-3

Palakkada, 41 Identity of, 54m, 55

Pālakka, Uygrasena of, 45, 47 Palayaru, battle of, 137

Pallava-Chalukya conflicts-Beginnings of, 88

Supposed origin of, 89, see also Introduction

Pallava art, origin and evolution of, 161

Pallava temples, evolution of, 161 Pallavamalla, see Nandivarman II Pallavamalla (= Nandivarman II), 113, 114, 116m, 119-31 Chalukyan invasion of Kanchi,

121-2 Duration of reign of, 119-20 Military events, 123-8

Religious leanings 127-8 State of learning under, 128-30

Pallavanichcharam, 13

Pallavaram, 6, 7, 13 Pallava rule, general considerations of, 146-61 Pallavas-Administration of, 147-57 Art of, 161 Early Pallavas of the Prakrit Records, 32-40 Great Pallavas, 79-131 History on the research on, 1-4 Later Pallavas, 132-45 Literature under, 157-61 Materials for the history of, 4 ff Of the Sanskrit plates, 41-69 Pallava inscriptions and copper plates, App. A, 163-214 Pallava rule in S. India, general reflections, 146-61 Theories of the origin of, 15-25, also Introduction Pāņarāshtra, 12 Paramēšvaratatāka, Kuram, 155 Paramēšvaravarman II, 111-2 Paramesvaravarman I, 41, 104-8 Paramēśvaraviņņagaram, see Vaikuntha Permal temple, Kanchi, 13 Origin of, 131 Paripadal, astronomical details in, Pariyala, battle of, 97 Parthasarathi temple, Inscription at, 135 Pallava origin of, 135n Referred to by Tirumangai Alvar, Parthian home of the Pallavas, 25 Pāsupatas, 95 Patalika (- Pataliputra), 12, 44 Patanjali, reference in, to Kanchi-pura, 157, 158 Periyapuranam, 1, 12, 90, 98 Account of the raid on Vatapi, 98, 122 Periyatirumadal, 131 Periyatirumöli, 10n Persian home, of the Pallavas, 25

Pingalandai, on the Pallavas, 10 Pishtāpura, 45 Poduka, 38 Pollnehi, 45 Potters, duty on, 152 Poygaiyar, identity of with Poygai Alvar, 30 Prabhavati Gupta, 72 Prakrit charters, Jouveau-Dubreuil on their age, 56 Prithivipathi I, Western Ganga, military exploits of, against Varaguna, 142 Prithivisēna I, Vakataka, 53 Southern conquest of, 71, 72 Prithivi Vyagra, Nishada chief, 125 Prithudaka (- Pehoa), 18 Profession taxes, under the Pallava kings, 152 Puļakēsin (11), 89 Pullalür (- Pallur and Polilore), batlle of, 89 Pullasarman, 107 Pulumāvi, 34 Puranänüru, 24, 29 Purushöffama, (- Mahēndravarman I), 90 Püsalär Nayanär, story of, 109, 109m Pūsili, family of, 141 P"thali, revenue term, 152 Pāvajūr, battlefield, 123

R

Raghu, Kadamba, 71

Rahasyadikadas (- Privy-councillors), 148 Rājakēsarīvarman (- Aditya I), 133 Rājasēkhara, 18 Rājasimha, Pandyan king, 159 (- Narasimhavarman Räjasimha 11), 6, 48 Dandin at the court of, 111a Literature under, 120-11 Monuments of, 109 Reign of, 108-12 Surnames of, 108 Rajasimbēsvara, see Kailāsanātha temple Rājavarma (- Rājasimba), 110 Ramakrishnakavi (M.). 221 Rāma Sarman, 159 Ranamalla, Pallava Prince, 114, 1164

Pikira, 41, 44

Perunguli, Assembly of, 154

Peruvalanallur, battle of, 105

Perumbandrruppadai, condition of

Perundevanar, 82; identity of see special Note by Editor

Känchi, description in, 28, 29

Sangramamalla, 114, 116a Rangacharya (M.), on Dandin's connection with Kanchi, 110, Sanka, Rashtrakutā Princess, 138, 139 Rangapatāka, Pallava Queen, Siva Sankaragrāma, battle of. 125 Sankaramangai (- Sankaragrāma) shrine at Kanchi built by, 108, Battlefield, 123 Identity of, 126 Sankirpajāti Rasanayagam, theory of, examin-(- Mahendravared, 21 man I), 90 Räshtraküta, invasions on Känchi, Sanskrit inscriptions, Dr. Fleet on, 126 - 7Marriage alliance with Pallavas, Santivarman, Kadamba King, 71 Rāshtras (- mandala), 148 Sarvagandi, 66 Ravivarman, Kadamba, 72, 73 Satahaniratta (- Satahani-Ahara), Rea (A.), on the origin of the Pallavas, 25 36, 29, 51, Satavahanas, 28, Rēva, Rashtrakuta Princess, 127. Satrumatta (- Mahéndravarman 131 Rice (L)., on the Parthian origin 4), 11 Satrumallesvarālaya, of the Pallavas, 17 Pallava-Rudrāchārya, 93 temple, 13 Sattan-Paliyili, Muttaraiya chief Rudradāman, 16, 19, 20, 21 Rudran Kannanār, 9, 14, 28, 36 Rudrasimba (III), Mahākshatrapa, Satyasandha (- Mahendravarman I), 90 Satyasēna (Svāmi), 52 Sekkilar, sources of, for writing Sabaras (-? Sauras), 125 Periyapuranam, 160 Senganpan, 30, 31 Sabhas (- Village-Assemblies)-Sēttupākkam, 149 Activities of, 155-7 Seven Pagodas, Mahābali-Committees of, 156 300 Different types of, 154 puram Distribution of, in the Pallava Shama Sastri-Kingdom, 153-7 On the initial date of Gupta era, In Chola times, 155% Membership of, 154-5 33, 60 On the date of Talgunda Pillar inscription, 71 Sakas, 17 Shepherds, duty on, 155 Säkyabhikshus, 10, 95 Shore Temple, at Mahabalipuram, Salankayanas, 47, 73-6 109-10 Religion of, 75 Relation of, with the Pallavas, 75 Siddbäpura, 28 Silabhadra, 12 Salt, manufacture of, royalty on, Birth place of, 103 151, 152 Simhala (- Ceylon), 84 Simhapota, Nol-Chief, 14 Samanas, at Madura, 160 Sambaudar, 500 Tirugnāna-Simhasürf, 12 Sambandar Simbayerman, 12, 42, 43, 44 Samudraghosha, Pallava war-drum, Simhavisbņu (-Avanisimha) 121 Achievements of, 84 Samudragupta, 22, 32, 35, 39, Bas-relief of, 87, 88 44-7, 52 Dynasty of, 82-112 Sangam works-Reign of, 10, 43, 44, 47, 49, 82-8 Light thrown by, 9 Testimony of, 8, 9, 22n, 28, 36 Religious learnings, 86 Sanskrit culture in the court of, Sangharamas, in Kanchi, account 84, 158

of, by Hinen-Tsang, 103

Simhavishpuchaturvedimangalam, Tāmbrapa (- Tāmbrāpasthāna) Simhavishpupotarayan, see Simha-41, 54, 55 vishnu, 79 Tanks, excavation of, by the Simmavinnupötadhirajan, Pallavas, 155-6 Simbavishpu, 87 Tank Supervision Committee, 156 Singavaram, 7 Tarunavachaspati, comment by, Siriyatirumadal, 131 Sirutouda (- Paranjōti), 98 Sittannavāsal, Pallava vestiges in, Tathagathe, in Kanchi, 103 Taxation and revenue-Compared with the Gupta, 153, Sivaskandanāga, 19, 20 Sivaskandavarman, 23, 29, 35, 36, 153m Sources and nature of, under 37, 39, 44, 48, 50 Pallavas, 150-54, 151w. Siyyamangalam, cave-temple at, Tellärrerinda Nandivarman, 136, origin of, 86 Skandanäga, 51 see (- Nandivarman III) Skandasishya, 52, 53, 54 Temples-Skandavarma, 43, 48, 55 At Kanchi, 109, 131 Srimalla, 114, 116 n Earliest Pallava inscriptional Parachakrakolāhala. reference to existence of, 161 Sri-Mara Evolution of, 161 Pandyan King, 140 Impetus to temple building, 159 Srinivasa Alyangar, (P. T.), 4. Mahabalipuram. 88. 100-2, 126 Srlpurambiya (- Tirupurambi-107 - 8Management of, by village. yam)assemblies, 156, 157 Battle of, 142 Identity with Tirupurambiyam, Monolithic temples, 7 Tevāram hymnists, 10, 11, 30, 159date of, 142 Srisikhari-Pallavesvaram, Pallava Tirayanëri, 155 temple, 144 Tirayar chiefs, identity of, 23, 24 Sthavira school of Buddhism in Tirthikas, 148 Kanchl, 103 Tirugnana-Sambandar, 30, 95 Stūpas, Asoka's stupas in Kauchi, Tirukkalukkunram, Pallava cave Subramanya Aiyar (K V.), on in, 7, 54 Tirukkövai, 160 the reign of Pallavamalla, 116. (Kumbha-Tirukudamükku 119, 123m konam), 140n Südraka, earlier works of, nature Tirukoilūr, Assembly of, 154, 201 of, 159 Tirukurundandakam, 131 Sundarar, position and work of, Tirumalisai Alvar, age of, 96 Tirumangai Alvar, 31, 39 Suprayoga (R.), 149# Allusion to victories of Nandi-varman II, 123-4 Sūramāra, battle of, 97 Surāshtra, 20 Mention of Pallava war instru-Suravalundür, 125 Suvisāka, Pahlava minister, 19, ments by, 121m Reference to Triplicane temple in, 135, 160 Svämidatta, of Kottūra, 45 Works of, 130-31, Swamikannu Pillai, on the astro-Tirumangai, battlefield, 123 nomical details in the Pari-Tirumugakkanam (- fee on Royal bādal, 9 Svaminatha Aiyar, Pandit on the messages), 152 Tirunariyur, 31 reading of Kajavar in Tamil Tirunāvukkarasu, see Appar

MSS., S5W

Tirunedundandakam, 131 Tirupurambiyam (-Sripurambi-yam), battle of, 142 Vaigal, battle of, 137 Tirullondalogai, 160 Vagur (- Bahūr), 150 Tiruvehka, temple of, at Kauchi, Vaikunthaperumāl temple, Kānchi Construction of by Pallavamalla, Tiruvelukkürrirukkai, 131 Sculptures in, 114 Tiruviprambēdu, 154 Their interpretation, 115, 116w Assembly of, 199 Vajapěya, 21, 34, 37 Tiruvorriyür, Assembly of, 151 Vākātakas, 52, 53 Toddy-drawers, duty on, 152 Tondamandalam (- Tundaka-Valaivanan, 21, 30 rāshtra) 14, 20, 26, 27, 34, 36 Vallam, Pallava monument at, 6, Conquest of, by Aditya Chola, Varagupa (II), defeat 133, 134. purambiyam, 142 Division of, into Districts, 147# Varaguna Mahārājā, campaigns in Invasion into, by Vikramadltya the Pallava territory; 136-7 11, 121 Varatungao (- Nandivarman III), Tondamandalapattayam, 22n, 23n 138 Tondamān Ilam-Tirayan, 9, 13, 21, Vāsishtiputra Palumāvi, 37 22, 24, 28, 29, 30, 35, 51 Vātāpi (- Badami), 97 Tondayar, 9, 17 Capture of, by Narasimhavar-Trivikrama, prasasti composer, mag I, 97, 98 130 Vayalür, pillar genealogy of, Trnayana Pallava, 145 49 Tundakarāshtra, see Tondamanda-Vayiramēga (- Dantidurga), lam, 36, 121 Känchi, 126-7, Tundakavishaya, see Tondamanin Tirumangai Allusion to dalam Alvar's hymns, 126m Tungavarman (- Nripatungavar-Identity of 126s, 127 man), 141 Vaviramēgbatatāka, Pallava Tank at Uttaramallür, 144, 155 Vayiramēgbavarmau, Pallava. U position of, in Pallava geneology, 141, 144 Vayirmēghvāykkal, Pallava Udayachandra, Pallava General, channel, 144 exploits of, 123-26 Věgavatí (R.), 124 Udayana, Sabara King, 125 Vellärn, battle of, 137 Ugrakopan (- Nandivarman III), Velleri, 155 Vengi, identification of, with Pedda Ugraperuvaludi, 29 Vengi, 16, 45, 47, 74 Ugrasēna, of Palakka, 45, 47 Venkayya-Ukkal, Assembly of, 154, 205 origin,

Identification of Dasanapura, 62

On Chola interregoum in Pal-

On the origin of the Pallavas,

Vidělvidugu (- Nandivarman III),

Vidyāvinīta Pallava (- Paramēš-varavarman I), 107

(- Mahendravar-lava History, 63-4

16

Vichitrachitta

man 1), 90

Ulaviyaküli, 152, 152 n Undavalli caves, their 78 Uparikara, 153 Uragapura, 104, Identification of, 104m Uratter, 149 Uttaramallür, 154 Assembly of, 195

Pallava tank at, 155, 156

Uttarapada, 18

Vihāras, in Kānchipuram, 95 Vijaya Buddhavarman, 39, 44 Vijayadevavarman, Salankayana King, 73

Vijayādītya Māvalivāņarayar, Bana King, 136

Vijaya-Isvaravarman, 145

Vijayanandivarman, Salankayana King, 74

Vijayanandivikramavarman, Nandivarman III

Vijayaskandavarman, 34, 35, 39, 48

Vijayaskandavarman, Salankayana King, 74 Vikramāditya, Bana Chief, 138

VIkramaditya, I, Southern invasion of, 105

I, Vishuu-Vikramendravarman kundin King, 76

Vikramendravarman II, Vishpukundin King, 76

Vilangättangadovanür, 149, 150

Village-boundaries, precautions in the marking of, 149

Vilvala (- Villivalam), 124 Vinukonda, 75

Virakūreha (- Vīrakoreha), 20, 48, 50, 51, 52, 54

Virattanesvara temple, at Tiruttani, 143

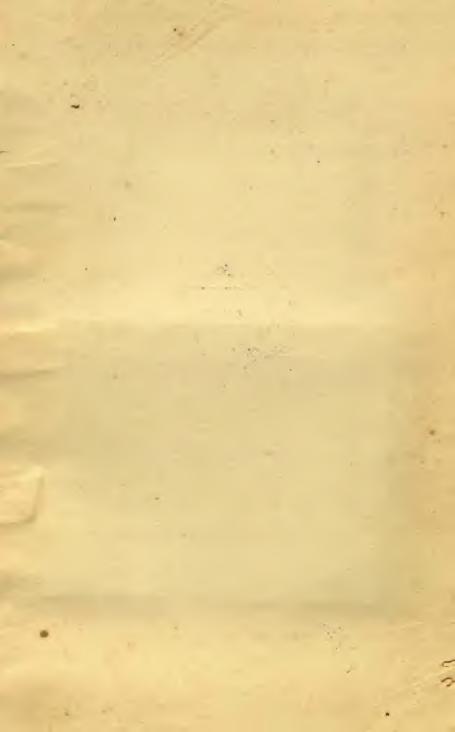

Vīrajtānēšvara temple, at Tiruvadi, 131

Vishayikas (- Viceroys), 148 Vishpugopa, 22, 23, 32, 33, 35, 39, 44, 47

Vishnukundins, 75-78 Genealogy of, 78 Relation with the Pallavas, 77 Rock-cut temples attributed to,

Vishpurāja (- Vishnuvardhana III, E. Chalukya), 125 Vishpuvardhana, 10, 43 Vishnuvarman, 73 Vyagraraja, 45

120 To

Archaeological Library
Call No. 93 4.0 1995 Gof Aig
Author- Aiyangar, S. Kreishne
Title-History Me Pallavas
Borrower No.	Date of Issue	Date of Return
"A book that is shut is but a block"
ARCHAEOLOGICAL GOVT. OF INDIA
GOVT. OF INDIA Department of Archaeology

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.

NEW DELHI.

3. 8., 148. N. DELIG.